Levi to Order Notification Of Citizens F.B.I. Harried

Unwitting Targets of 17-Year Program May Ask Destruction of Files or Seek Damages—Columnist Wins Ruling

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 30—Democrat of Manhattan, disbarred today that Mr. Levi had approved a request by Joseph Kraft, the syndicated columnist, for the destruction of information compiled about him by the F.B.I. during a trip to Paris in 1969.

Mrs. Abzug, who heads a House subcommittee on Government information and individual rights, made public a letter in which Mr. Levi advised her of his decision that, under the privacy act, which took effect in September, the records relating to Mr. Kraft could no longer appropriately be maintained by the Justice Department.

The Congresswoman hailed as "a landmark action" Mr. Levi's ruling that under the law materials could be categorized as "inappropriate even though they were lawfully gathered by the F.B.I."

The surveillance of Mr. Kraft was not a part of Cointelpro, but was carried out on orders from J. Edgar Hoover, the late F.B.I. director, by William C. Sullivan, then the bureau's in-

The mass notification program, a proposal for which will be contained in recommendations to be sent to Mr. Levi within a few days, will subject the Justice Department to the possibility of arraignment of civil lawsuits from individuals whose careers or personal lives were damaged by Cointelpro, one department official said.

HUMPHREY EFFORT TO BLOCK CARTER IN WISCONSIN SEEN

Senator Is Said to Intervene for Udall, Perhaps to Keep the Race Open Later

Special to The New York Times

MADISON, Wis., March 30—Senator Hubert H. Humphrey has intervened in the Democratic Presidential contest for the first time, a rapidly growing array of evidence indicates, by attempting to head off a victory by Jimmy Carter in the Wisconsin primary.

The Minnesota Senator is subtly assisting Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona in this state, where Mr. Udall is believed to trail Mr. Carter, a former Georgia Governor, by a narrow margin.

Mr. Humphrey has told friends that if Mr. Carter wins here next Tuesday and runs a strong second to Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington in New York the same day, the contest for the Democratic nomination may be all but over.

Governor Agrees

Gov. Patrick J. Lucey of Wisconsin holds the same view, and the two discussed the situation here yesterday.

Mr. Humphrey has been saying for months that he would avoid the Presidential primaries this year and hold himself ready for a possible attempt for the nomination if, after the final primaries June 5, no active candidate seemed within striking distance.

All evidence indicates he is sticking to his resolve to avoid the primaries. The filing deadlines in all but four states—Kentucky, Idaho, Nevada and New Jersey—have already passed with no action by him.

"Honest Neutrality"

Publicly, the Senator has continued to insist that he will not raise a finger until after June 5. At a news conference in Madison yesterday, for example, he said he had "tried my level best to maintain an honest neutrality."

But there have been a number of small developments suggesting that Mr. Humphrey is acting behind the scenes, including the following:

Representative Robert J. Cornell of Green Bay, a Humphrey enthusiast who conspicuously held back when five of his Wisconsin House colleagues endorsed Mr. Udall, joined them last week. Reliable informants said Mr. Humphrey had indicated his support for Udall.

Carter Says He Opposes Special Favors' to Aid City

By MARTIN TOLCHIN

Former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia thinks it "would be inappropriate for the Federal Government to single out New York City for special favors."

"I think it would be inappropriate for the Federal Government to single out New York City for special favors," Mr. Carter said.

To solve New York City's problems, Mr. Carter said that he would place heavy reliance on good staff work, a joint Federal-state-city approach that would include Federal guarantees of state bonds and the ultimate good judgment of the American people.

"I doubt that any other political figure knows more about the attitude of the American people than I do," Mr. Carter said. "And there is a tremendous amount of good will and legitimate concern about New York City's future."

"I don't have any doubt," he continued, "that as an elected President that I can marshal the full support of the American people for the proper sharing of responsibility as long as the evolution of the process is carefully monitored and as long as those other requirements that I outlined are met."

During the interview, Mr. Carter created an aura of both casualness and strong discretion.

CONGRESS BACKING FORD ON DEFENSE

Liberal Democrats Seeking Cut in Funds Rebuffed by House and Senate Units

By EILEEN SHANAHAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 30—President Ford won today significant victories in both the House and Senate Budget Committees, where attempts by liberal Democrats to force major reductions in the President's military budget were defeated.

The action indicates that Congress is likely to approve military appropriations in line with the President's goals.

In the Senate Budget Committee, a token reduction of $290 million in the President's planned $181.1 billion in military outlays for the fiscal year 1977 was the most that the liberals could obtain.

House Cut Is Larger

And a token reduction of $300 million in Mr. Ford's revised figure of $113.3 billion for new spending authority for the military, also for the fiscal year 1977, beginning Oct. 1, was all that was voted.

A somewhat larger reduction was made by the House Budget Committee, which voted a cut of $1.3 billion in future spending authority and $500 million in outlays for the fiscal year 1977, thus reducing the proposed figure for budget authority to $112 billion and the proposed spending figure to $100.6 billion.

However, even the cuts made in the House were far smaller than those hoped for by liberal Democrats, who, until quite recently, sought cuts as high as $7 billion.

The outlay figure represents

5 Israeli Arabs Killed in Protest Riots

By TERENCE SMITH
Special to The New York Times

NAZARETH, Israel, March 30—A general strike by Israel's Arab citizens erupted today into violent clashes with security forces in more than a dozen villages in the northern half of the country that left at least five Arabs dead and about 70 people wounded.

Israeli policemen and security forces opened fire repeatedly to break up demonstrations by Arabs who were protesting a Government plan to appropriate Arab land as part of a regional housing and development program in predominantly Arab Galilee.

The rioters set up scores of roadblocks and fought police and soldiers with stones and flaming kerosene bombs. A spokesman said that 38 of the wounded were from the security forces.

Worst Violence in Years

The violence was by far the worst to erupt among the normally quiescent 450,000-member Israeli Arab community since the foundation of the state. It reflected both the growing political awareness among Israeli Arabs and the cumulative discontent of a group that feels it has suffered political, economic and social discrimination since 1948.

The demonstrators also appear to have been encouraged by the strikes and disorders staged almost continuously for several weeks by their fellow Palestinians on the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River. Those riots have, apparently, had a contagious effect on the Israeli Arabs, who were already seething over the Government's land-expropriation program.

Whatever the cause, the dimension of the day's disturbing

Productivity Issue Snarls City Transit Negotiations

By LEE DEMBART

Productivity remained the key stumbling block yesterday between the Transit Authority and the Transport Workers Union as they strove to reach an agreement to prevent a bus and subway strike tomorrow morning.

Both sides were reported to have adopted positions that offered no compromise, the management saying that productivity would be necessary to pay for a cost-of-living raise and the union saying it could not give back anything.

Theodore W. Kheel, labor adviser to Mayor Beame, said there was "no basis for an agreement that would satisfy both sides."

RACE TO SUCCEED WILSON DOWN TO 2

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, March 30—The contest to succeed Harold Wilson as Britain's Prime Minister was narrowed today to two men: James Callaghan, the Foreign Secretary, and Michael Foot, the Secretary for Employment.

Mr. Callaghan is expected to win in the third round of balloting, the results of which will be announced next Monday evening. He won 141 votes cast today by Labor members of the House of Commons. Mr. Foot won 133. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, finished last with 38 and was thus automatically eliminated from the next round.

The Callaghan camp is optimistic because he expects to pick up the bulk of Mr. Healey's votes, thereby giving him the necessary majority of 159 if all 317 Labor Members of Parliament eligible to vote do so next week. But the forces behind Mr. Foot were not conceding defeat.

"The ballot remains wide open," said John Silkin, Mr. Foot's campaign manager. "The question is really what happens to the 38 Healey votes. Most of them are individual, sturdily

Iraq Is Said to Be Threatening Armed Intervention in Lebanon

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, March 30—Western intelligence reports reaching Paris today said that Iraq had threatened to intervene militarily in Lebanon if Syria exerted heavy pressure on Moslem forces there to restore a cease-fire.

According to these reports, Kamal Jumblat, the Lebanese leftist leader, and Yasir Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, received the Iraqi commitment before they met President Hafez al-Assad of Syria in Damascus last Saturday.

The Iraqis promised to send airborne units to help the Moslem-leftist alliance in Lebanon and to send army units across the Syrian-Iraqi border if the Syrian Army became substantially involved in the Lebanese situation, the reports said.

If true, this would be a new element in the Lebanese civil war and would appear to explain why Syria has been unable to reimpose a cease-fire that the Syrians negotiated in January between Moslems and Christians, which broke down after several weeks.

Syrian-Iraqi relations have been strained for some time. Last year, there appeared to be a chance of a military clash between the two countries over the use of the waters of the Euphrates. Iraq has been backing the so-called "rejection front" of extremist Palestinian guerrilla organizations, which opposes any kind of negotiation or settlement with Israel. Iraq has also been critical of Syria for signing the Golan Heights agreement in 1974 to separate Syrian and Israeli forces.

Iraq's reported threat to intervene militarily in Lebanon was believed to be intended more as a deterrent against any further Syrian intervention there than as a plan of

Salem Witch Hunts in 1692 Linked to LSD-Like Agent

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD

The witches of Salem in 1692 may have been nothing more than the hallucinations of young girls who fell ill from eating some contaminated bread, according to a new study.

This physiological explanation for the famous witch hunt in the Massachusetts village, which led to the trial and execution of 20 persons, was developed by a young California psychologist and reported in the April 2 issue of the journal Science.

Minnda R. Caporael, a graduate student in psychology at the University of California at Santa Barbara, has marshaled evidence to suggest that it was not the devil who cast the strange spell over Salem, or even a simple case of fraud or mass hysteria.

Instead, she contends that those who swore to seeing "diabolical deeds" and "the ill at work" might have been suffering from convulsions. This was a common condition in those days resulting from eating bread contaminated by a

SYRIANS PRESSING LEFTISTS IN BEIRUT TO ACCEPT TRUCE

Leader of Alliance Rejects Demand—Says Damascus Acts to Cut Arms Supply

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Wednesday, March 31—Syrian mediators increased pressure on recalcitrant Lebanese factions yesterday, demanding that Moslem leaders and their leftist allies agree at once to a week-long truce in Lebanon's civil war.

But as Moslem forces continued to press forward in downtown Beirut and the city shook to artillery and mortar duels, Kamal Jumblat, the leader of the Moslem Druse sect in Lebanon and titular head of the alliance, refused again, as he did on Monday, to agree to an immediate truce.

[President Ford and King Hussein of Jordan, who was in Washington after meeting with Syrian leaders, joined in an appeal for a Lebanese cease-fire, and the United States sent a special envoy to Beirut to help work out a settlement. Page 16. At the United Nations, Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, in an unusual initiative, raised the Lebanese crisis with the Security Council. Page 13.]

Syrian Pressure Charges

"We are a little harassed by Syrian pressure," Mr. Jumblat said as he announced the rejection of Syrian cease-fire demands after a meeting with the Moslem and lesser Christian leftist leaders who make up his alliance. He said a truce now would benefit "the other side" in the civil war, the Christian rightists.

He told reporters that Syria was trying to cut off supplies of ammunition and weapons to his armed men, and he charged also that the Syrians were putting strong pressure on Al Fatah, the main Palestinian guerrilla group, to withdraw its military support from his side.

Syrian officials thereupon insisted, through direct contacts with Mr. Jumblat and Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian guerrilla leader, that their demands for a cease-fire be taken up again.

Speaking of Syrian pressure as he met with reporters in Beirut where he maintains his headquarters, Mr. Jumblat said: "It has taken the form of political pressure on ourselves and the Palestinian leaders and also practical pressure by cutting our reserves of ammunition."

Bank-Tax Shortfall Hurts State Budget

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 30—The State Budget Division announced today that less than expected receipts from the newly imposed bank tax would throw the state's budget out of balance by as much as $180 million next year.

Expressing dismay at this latest turn of events in the state's fiscal crisis, Peter C. Goldmark Jr., the Budget Director, said the deficit would have to be closed by additional budget cuts and one other device that he acknowledged he would turn to with great reluctance.

This device, sometimes criticized as gimmicky, would call for the state to postpone income tax refunds to taxpayers until after April 1, 1977, which

Work Stoppage Causes Tie-Ups in Japan

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times
TOKYO, March 30—Nation-wide strikes by more than two million transportation, communications, medical, mining and harbor workers virtually paralyzed Japan today as organized labor opened the second phase of its current contract negotiations under the cloud of this country's continuing recession.

The outcome of the labor offensive is unpredictable since management no longer has the accustomed rapid business growth to finance its traditionally generous wage settlements. Japan's labor federations are demanding, among other things, wage increases averaging 16.5 percent. Managements have, on the average, offered half that.

Although suburbs are spreading-out around all of Japan's large cities, this process involves homebuilding primarily. Industries and businesses have yet to forsake the cities to any great extent. So most workers have longer trips to work, mostly on the national and private train lines that were halted today. But even persons with automobiles were delayed as non-striking truck drivers deliberately caused huge traffic jams by creeping along the expressways at the minimum legal speed, 30 miles an hour.

Firmer Control Shown in Cambodia

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times
BANGKOK, Thailand, March 30—The Cambodian Government appears to be rapidly consolidating its control, more rapidly than seemed possible a few months ago. For the first time, some of this new sense of order is believed to be filtering out of Phnom Penh to the rural reaches of the country.

Large crowds were reported to have gathered in Phnom Penh to protest the alleged attack by F-111 aircraft. The national radio reported similar demonstrations in a variety of provincial towns. There was no evidence that any such attack ever took place. Most Western analysts here are inclined to believe that a small band of saboteurs set off an explosion in an ammunition dump. Clearly, though, the Cambodian Communists are now in a position to organize wide campaigns on issues that concern them, a position they did not have several months ago.

Mr. Hu Nim, the Information Minister, who is clearly aligned with Mr. Khieu Samphan, was the third minister elected to the Assembly also on the factory workers' list. Mr. Khieu Samphan is still apparently the most powerful of the leaders, since it is he who signs all principal communiques that, in turn, are read on the radio by Mr. Hu Nim. Apparently Mr. Khieu Samphan and Mr. Son Sen, newest member of the group and nominally the Defense Minister, have a number of allies hidden among the 50 members of the army that were voted into the Assembly.

At the same time, there has been an apparent slowdown in the rate of Cambodian refugees arriving at the Thai border. While no precise figures are yet available—all such crossings are illegal, most occur in the dead of night—there seems to have been a dip in the last few weeks.

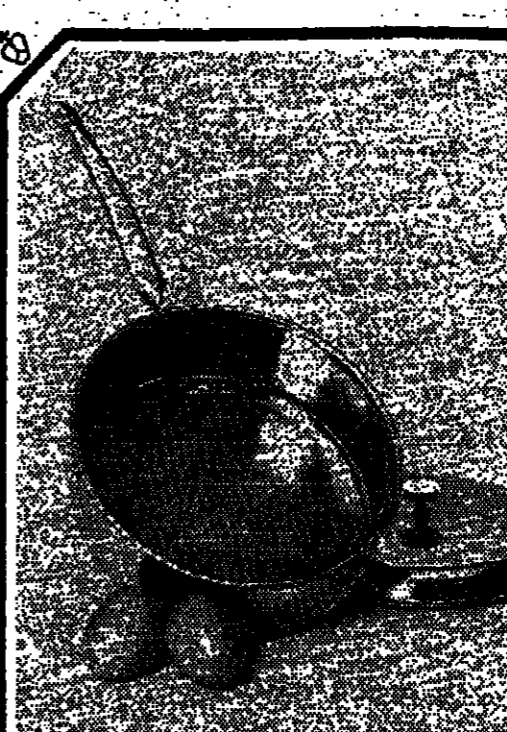

Most Westerners who try to follow Cambodian affairs from Bangkok are still dubious about the real significance of the 250-member National People's Assembly, which was elected on March 20. None of the ruling elite—particularly the triumvirate of Deputy Prime Ministers, Khieu Samphan, Sun Sen, and Ieng Sary—was elected to the Assembly, an immediate indication that the body is unlikely to have any major policy-making powers.

But while each of these three men is clearly well represented in the Assembly, there is still no evidence that any sort of war for supremacy is being waged by any of the three or by Prince Sihanouk.

There have been similar lapses, followed by sudden surges. Officials who deal with refugees are waiting to see if the current decrease can be traced to increasingly strict control spreading through the country, or alternatively to the late rice harvest and wider availability of adequate food.

The Phnom Penh radio did report that the leaders, with the elderly figurehead President of Cambodia, Pen Nouth, and Prince Norodom Sihanouk, who is still residing in Phnom Penh, all voted in the national elections at the polling place set up at the capital's central railway station.

Analyses by Western intelligence sources now indicate that the major power figures apparently got their own representatives into the Assembly. Listed among representatives of "Phnom Penh factory workers" was Ieng Thirith, the wife of the Deputy Prime Minister and to a number of surprisingly Foreign Minister, Ieng Sary. She is also understood to be

erence to Whites Habit in Rhodesia

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN

IRY, Rhodesia, Nelson Mpango old, the grandson a university grad- in contemporary terms, a militant, and socializes with ves his own car eveled within the of a Rhodesian southern Africa. ngo is a follower Ndabaningi Sit- eled nationalist se faction has op- form of constitu- itiations with the rity Government as instead backed ggle. A few days pangalan was asked explain why in ruggle of the na- here had never- stained campaign resistance, strikes s in a country icks outnumber 2 to 1.

But here, in what has been termed the last outpost of colonial forms and manners, the apparent psychological acceptance by many blacks that whites are superior and invincible is more pronounced. It shows itself in many subtle ways. For example, on a recent drive hundreds of miles through the country into towns and tribal areas, not one person could be seen wearing naive dress. Instead, even in the dustiest backwater, men were most commonly seen walking or bicycling in tie and jacket. The women wore Western-style skirts and blouses or dresses.

Last Friday night there was a political debate at the University of Salisbury, which has an interracial student body and faculty. An audience made up almost entirely of black men listened politely, even deferentially, as the leader of the white moderate minority party put forth his plan for a five-year transition to majority rule, coupled with international guarantees for minorities. But when black representatives of the competing nationalist factions spoke, the opposing camps of students jeered and hooted. Most of the students were followers of the Sithole group and they called the Nkomo people sell-outs. Conversely, the scattering of pro-Nkomo students denounced Mr. Sithole as a paper tiger. Yet whenever the students referred to the European clothes worn by blacks on the streets of Salisbury, is considered by observers as a subtle indication of the apparent psychological acceptance by blacks of white superiority and invincibility.

Prime Minister, a man they obviously loathed, it was always as "Mr. Smith," never "racist Smith" or "rebel Smith" as he is called in the press and radio of black Africa. In contrast, the nationalist leaders were always called, "Joshua" or "Ndabaningi" by both their disciples and opponents.

To date, according to Government sources, 18 white and 295 black civilians have been killed by nationalist guerrillas. It is difficult to find explanations for the apparent timidity of the nationalists. The Government's explanation is that the preponderance of blacks recognize that their lives here, with ample employment, educational opportunities, and in many cases pensions, are materially better than those of blacks in other African countries and that they do not want to jeopardize this. In support of this view, Government officials point out that nearly half of Rhodesia's 4,000 regular troops defending the country against guerrilla raids from across the Mozambique border are black.

The hard-line whites also insist that there is more hostility and distrust between the country's two dominant tribal groups, the Ndebele and Mashona, than between black and white, and that the division between the nationalist factions rests largely on ancient tribal antagonisms. Mr. Nkomo is a Ndebele and Mr. Sithole is a Mashona.

South Africa Role Mentioned
Mr. Khartanov asserted that the "aid to Angola arose in very complicated conditions," and said the former colony was a target of aggression by South Africa, which wanted to make Angola a basis for attacks on other African countries.

Soviet, in U.N., Defends Its Angola Intervention

By PAUL HOFMANN

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., in the interest of the global ambitions of a superpower, is to blame for the events in Angola. Mr. Botha declared, "While the Security Council continued its Angola debate today, negotiations were going on behind the scenes to seek consensus on a draft resolution and head off a veto by China or the United States. A text worked out by third-world countries would condemn 'South Africa's aggression against the People's Republic of Angola,' and call on South Africa 'to pay full compensation for the damage and destruction inflicted on Angola.'"

Why China Objects.
China objects to the draft on the ground that it fails to condemn also the Soviet-Cuban military intervention in Angola. The United States position on Angola is similar to China's as far as the Soviet-Cuban involvement is concerned. The chief American delegate, William W. Scranton, is expected to raise this issue when he addresses the Council tomorrow.

South Africa Role Mentioned
Mr. Khartanov asserted that the "aid to Angola arose in very complicated conditions," and said the former colony was a target of aggression by South Africa, which wanted to make Angola a basis for attacks on other African countries. South Africa's permanent representative, Roelof F. Botha, who earlier today requested to be heard, told the Council tonight that his country had played a "very limited role" in Angola. The purpose he explained, was to protect a hydroelectric project and to care for thousands of refugees.

RHODESIAN TORTURE IS CALLED ROUTINE

LONDON, March 30 (AP)—Torture is a "routine practice" of both the police and armed forces in Rhodesia, Amnesty International contends in a pamphlet published here.

The human rights organization also said that more than 60 persons had been hanged in Rhodesia since the white minority government Prime Minister Ian D. Smith declared independence from Britain in 1965. The information in the pamphlet—called "Amnesty International Briefing on Rhodesia"—was obtained from various sources, including missionaries, the organization said. It specified that 700 people were under political detention and that some of them had been held without trial for 10 years. The pamphlet maintained that torture was particularly frequent in northeast Rhodesia where black nationalist guerrillas are opposing the Government. Among the methods cited were beating the body with fists and sticks, beating the soles of the feet and applying electric shocks.

TINE CHIEF'S SACRIFICE

Declares Austerity as Answer to the Economic Crisis

By JUAN DE ONIS
The New York Times
BUENOS AIRES, March 30. Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, Argentina's new President, tonight declared "austerity" as the answer to the economic crisis.

In a revised speech, Gen. Videla said the overthrow of President Juan Peron last year was not directed against a group of political enemies but against the armed forces to fill a vacuum created by the political failures of the government and the parties in Congress. He said the forces issued orders, but our voice was not heard, he said. "We are not out of an ambition but from our duty to protect national interests."

Step Up Drive

Adela gave assurance that the new Government would respect human rights. He said that the Government would continue to "subversive" delinquency until it is completely annihilated. He said that any outward signs of terrorism here, two incidents that the armed forces engaged in an insurrection against the left. Security forces in the offices of the Communist newspaper early in the morning who had attacked a police station.

Shots were fired and policemen in the raid on Nuestra Palabra, a publication of the party. The building was destroyed after 15 minutes. Communist Party's Central Committee denied reports that had been fired from the newspaper early in the morning. The news-arms had been arrested. Activities have been ordered by the junta, but the party, unlike the Marxist splinter, has not been declared.

Communist Party had continued publication as an independent. In a declaration of the military coup, the Central Committee did not favor military actions, but would support the Government on shown for human social justice and use of national imperialist. The junta also attacked bands that kidnap with impunity, a referred group that have been of leftists. In-munist political leaders.

Attack Falls

Terrillas killed in the attack were hunted down by the police after a successful attack yesterday on a police station in Buenos Aires. They were killed in this attack even when a house was burning. José C. Paz, a former Peronist, was serving as a hideout, according to reports.

Accounts Frozen

BUENOS AIRES, March 30. A new military Government today froze the bank accounts of the deposed President Juan Peron and former Peronist officials.

Peron has been under house arrest since the armed forces overthrew her last Wednesday. Military authorities said whether she will be charged with corruption charges. The Central Bank announced that all banks had been ordered to freeze the accounts of deposit boxes of Peron, former President Campora, the leaders of labor unions and former ministers and officials. He said José López Rega, Minister of Social Welfare, also was Mrs. Peron's secretary until he resigned and left the country in mid-1975.

Levi to Order F.B.I. Notification Of Citizens Who Were Harassed

The late Dr. King, a victim of Cointelpro, was for at least six years subjected to telephone taps and listening devices placed in his hotel rooms. The Cointelpro effort, which began in 1956 and was formally halted by Mr. Hoover in 1972, included 12 programs directed against the Communist Party, the Socialist Workers Party, the Ku Klux Klan and groups of students and "new left" radicals.

Mr. Sullivan, according to reliable bureau sources, trailed Mr. Kraft and arranged with French intelligence officials to place him under continuous surveillance and to install listening devices in his room at the Hotel George V, near the Arc de Triomphe.

The sources said that Mr. Hoover had ordered the surveillance because of his concern about Mr. Kraft's contacts with representatives of the North Vietnamese Government and the Vietcong, then in attendance at the Paris peace talks.

Mr. Kraft expressed gratitude today at Mr. Levi's decision to destroy the information gathered about him during that trip, terming the episode "a bugging story that has a happy denouement."

The columnist said he was "very, very satisfied and vindicated that you can work within the system and get a result that I think is satisfactory."

He said he had been allowed to see the materials, and had not known "whether to laugh or cry" upon discovering that the files contained mostly "political gossip . . . that was all they seemed to be interested in."

King Case Cited
An aide to Mrs. Abzug characterized Mr. Levi's interpretation of the materials that did not qualify as appropriate under the terms of the privacy act as "a very far-reaching one." He said he believed it would pave the way for the destruction of such items as those produced by the F.B.I.'s surveillance of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Dismissals Sought
Previously disclosed Cointelpro documents have illustrated efforts by the bureau to secure the dismissal of Socialist Workers members from their jobs by sending of anonymous letters to employers, as well as attempts to foment discord between children and their parents or between wives and husbands.

In some cases such attempts met with success, and though relatively little is known about Cointelpro as a whole, hundreds or even thousands of members of other domestic political organizations may have been the targets of the same techniques and may still be unaware of their involvement.

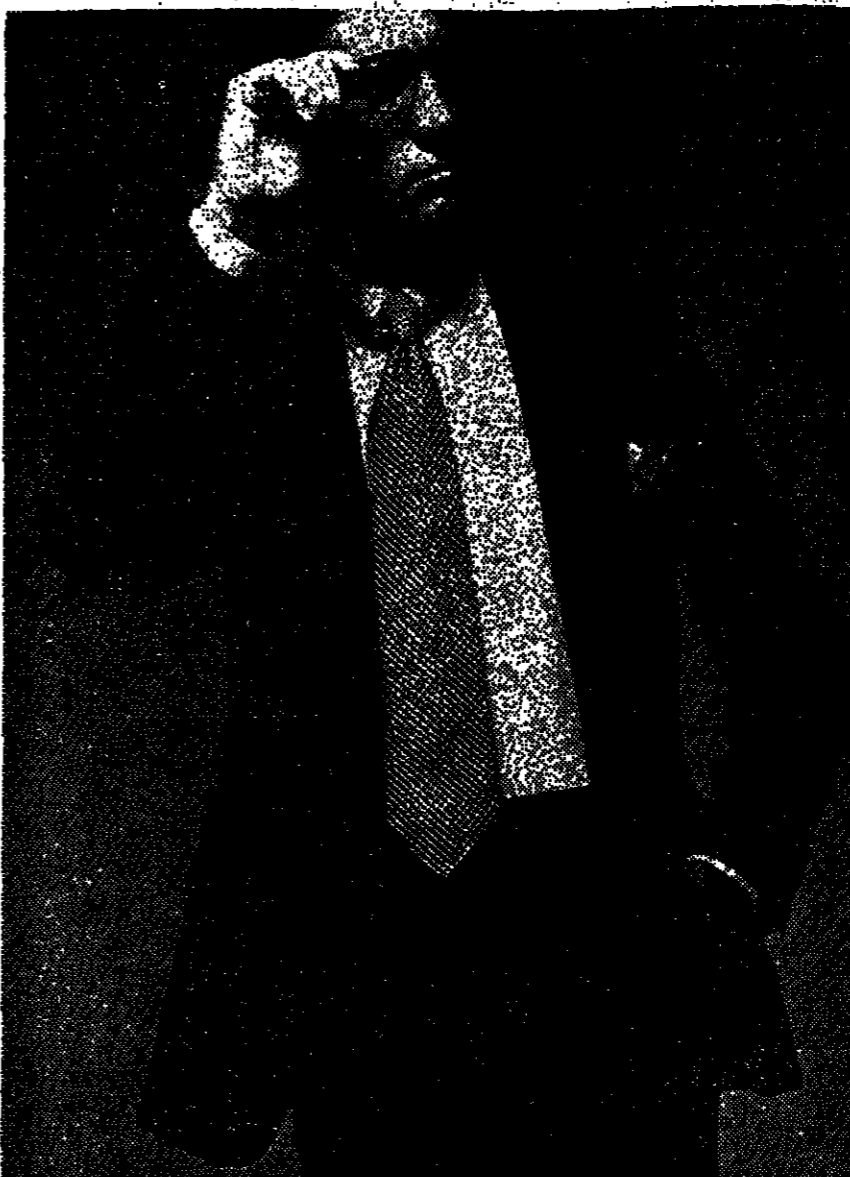

Such persons will receive the notifications to be ordered by Mr. Levi, according to a Justice Department official, may decide to sue for damages in compensation for lost jobs or disrupted marriages.

Ford Plant Resumes Output After a 5-Day Strike Ends
DETROIT, March 30 (UPI)—A key Ford Motor Company parts plant has resumed full output of axles and drive shafts as workers ended a five-day walk-out that had threatened to close all of Ford's North American plants.

Members of United Auto workers Local 228 voted 877-396 yesterday to ratify an agreement on health and safety issues that had been worked out in two lengthy weekend bargaining sessions.

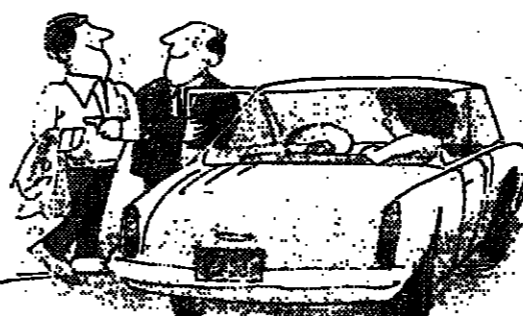

The strike by 6,100 workers began last Wednesday in suburban Sterling Heights, the only Ford massive manufacturing complex plant that builds axles and drive shafts for Ford cars and light trucks.

Ford Weighs 'Modest' Postal Subsidy

WASHINGTON, March 30 (UPI)—President Ford has a panel studying the United States Postal Service's financial problems and will consider at least a modest Federal subsidy to assist it, his press secretary, Ron Nessen said today.

Mr. Nessen's statement to reporters came as Louis Cox, the service's general counsel, defended the beleaguered postal rate-setting system before the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee. He said rates were being set "honestly and without favoritism."

Mr. Nessen said the Budget Director, James T. Lynn, was heading a special investigation into the service's problems, and that "one idea the President would consider is a very modest public-service subsidy."

Mr. Lynn met for 90 minutes today with Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar, Mr. Nessen said, and will confer with him again next week as recommendations are prepared for the President's consideration.

"The President believes the essential decision to switch the Government department to a semiprivate [corporation] was a wise decision because it got the postal service out of patronage and politics," Mr. Nessen said.

Mr. Ford thinks the service "ought to be paid for by the people who use it," Mr. Nessen said, but "he sees a public service element in it which justifies a minor contribution from the Federal Government."

Mr. Nessen said that Mr. Lynn reported that he "doesn't go along with the suggestion that the Postal Service will be going broke in two months."

Mr. Bailar told the House committee yesterday that the service's problems could be solved in the long run only by higher rates, reduced service or a Federal subsidy.

In testimony today, Mr. Cox said he considered "kind of an intriguing idea" a proposal under study by the committee for abolishing the Postal Rate Commission and pegging future rate increases to the Consumer Price Index. But he said there was merit in having rates reviewed by the commission.

Representative Paul Simon, Democrat of Illinois, said that since 1971, postal rates had risen at a much greater rate than the Consumer Price Index.

Mr. Simon told Mr. Cox that he thought Congress would be willing to vote subsidies for the Postal Service "if we see service improving a precipitately" and if future requests for rate increases were restrained.

Opening April 1, 1976

The First Home Video Center

Harvey, with over 48 years of experience in the home entertainment business, firmly believes that Video's time has finally come. That's why we're opening a special store completely devoted to Video.

Now you can experience the full impact of big screen showings, formerly the exclusive domain of film. You can record programs unattended, and watch one program while you are recording another.

The creative capabilities of Video have become virtually unlimited. Portable systems enable you to record color and B&W programs and see your results instantaneously.

To make the Opening of the Harvey Video Center an extra special event, we've invited factory representatives from Sony, JVC, Advent, Vicon, and Scotch to present their astounding new products, to answer all your questions, and just to welcome you to the new world of Video.

The Opening is on Thursday and Friday, April 1st and 2nd at 155 East 45th Street. To whet your appetite, here's some of the equipment we'll be featuring:

The Amazing Advent VideoBeam™ Color Television

The life-size 7-foot (diagonal measurement) VideoBeam picture is ten times the size of the biggest conventional television. This completely revolutionary two-piece television set receives regular programs, but projects them onto its giant 7-foot screen.

Described as "The most significant advance in television since color," "Big as life," "Like having your own movie theatre," these reactions cannot begin to convey the impact the VideoBeam will have on you.

That's why you must see the big picture for yourself. At the new Harvey Video Center.

Sony Betamax TV Recording Systems

The Betamax TV recording system incorporates all of the desirable features of videocassette recording into a unit that is both attractive and affordable for the home.

The Betamax LV 1901 lets you record one program while watching another on its built-in 19" Trinitron Color Television. Its automatic timer lets you start taping whenever you want—unattended—for up to 1 hour, and playback whenever you want.

If you already own a Trinitron (or other TV) you can still build a library of Betamax programs by buying the Sony SL-7200 Betamax Videocassette Recorder. It does virtually everything the LV 1901 does, but substitutes your own TV.

Both Betamax systems are waiting for you at the new Harvey Video Center.

Portable JVC and Sony Color and B&W Videotape and Videocassette Recording Systems

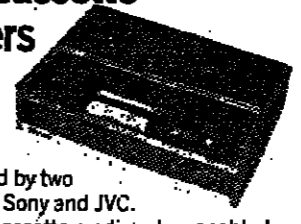

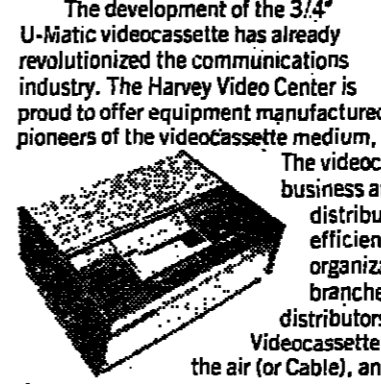

These portable systems provide the user with a complete television studio in a compact package that weighs less than 30 lbs.

Available in EIAJ standard 1/2" videotape or 20-minute 3/4" videocassette formats, these portable systems operate on regular AC current, car, and internal batteries. They extend your Video flexibility to any location or recording situation.

The Harvey Video Center will give you "hands-on" demonstrations of portable Video. That will be all the selling you'll need.

Sony and JVC Videocassette Recorders and Players

The development of the 3/4" U-Matic videocassette has already revolutionized the communications industry. The Harvey Video Center is proud to offer equipment manufactured by two pioneers of the videocassette medium, Sony and JVC.

The videocassette medium has enabled business and industry to produce and distribute information quickly and efficiently throughout entire organizations; from home office to branches, salesmen, dealers, distributors, or directly to consumers.

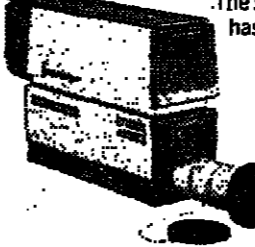

Videocassette machines can record directly off the air (or Cable), and, with the simple addition of a video camera, enable you to create your own high-quality audio/video programming.

Videocassette recorders have already found their way into many a home. Built-in or add-on tuners enable you to record directly off the air; timers extend your flexibility for automatic, unattended recording. You don't ever have to miss a program again. In fact, you can watch one program while you're recording another!

Harvey has a great collection of the most exciting video programming, which we use to demonstrate our equipment. You'll want to start a video library, too.

In the meantime, come watch some of ours.

JVC and Sony Video Cameras

The selection of cameras available to Video users has become so extensive that the appropriate choice is assured for virtually every recording situation.

The new Harvey Video Center features high quality cameras from Sony and JVC that range from the most basic CCTV Security system to cameras that are capable of delivering an incredibly clear, crisp color picture.

Sony and Scotch Videotape and Videocassettes

Both Scotch and Sony have developed improved binder systems for their videocassettes that provides a long-term stop-motion capability.

These new formulations also make for a less abrasive tape, significantly extending the life of your recorder's heads.

The new Harvey Video Center stocks videocassettes in several lengths (ranging from 10 minutes to 1 hour) and many other tape formats, to offer you the most efficient use of videotape.

Television will never be the same.

Starting on April 1, 1976 you need never again think of television as a passive medium.

Come to the Harvey Video Center Opening. Take hold of the Video controls, learn about the limitless applications of video, compare Video's affordability to any other medium.

Remember Harvey Video Center's Opening, April 1st and 2nd. And they'll still call us Harvey Radio.

Mr. Kelly Hears Victim Plead Honesty in Dealing With Adjustments

JANE E. BRODY
As Told to The New York Times

STETERSBURG BEACH, Fla.—Orville E. Kelly, 53, is a former newspaperman from Burlington, Iowa, who is a cancer patient who is dying of his disease.

Three years ago, Mr. Kelly was informed that he had pharyngeal lymphoma, a cancer of the lymph system which there is no cure. Although from the time he had been taking drugs to control his cancer, it was not until recent months that all detectable signs of the disease had disappeared.

Mr. Kelly is among tens of thousands of cancer patients whose lives have been extended by cancer treatments. Mr. Kelly found, however, that the diagnosis of cancer is hardly worth living for if you are unable to cope with the emotional and social problems of cancer.

As a result of his experience, Mr. Kelly, three years ago, founded an organization called Today Count, to help cancer patients and their families deal with the problems and learn the most of their life together.

Working with the members of the organization, which has chapters around the country, Mr. Kelly has found that "the rejection, the anger, the depression and the anger were difficult to contend with in the cancer itself." He said many misconceptions have about cancer things worse.

Mr. Kelly told Mr. Kelly that he refused to kiss him because she had read somewhere that cancer was contagious that has no basis.

Another patient said, "I told my friends about it to management and a separate restroom available for me."

Mr. Kelly described the problems he faced when cancer was diagnosed. "I was up," he said. "The bed were turned and I went to bed to find it inevitable. I even thought of suicide as an easy way out."

Mr. Kelly said, "My friends were uneasy with me, afraid they would do something wrong. And I remember one visitor who exclaimed, 'I've been dying to meet you, and then she immediately died for saying the wrong thing.'"

Mr. Kelly said, "I became pretty bad. My wife is sleeping in another room and I discovered later she didn't want me to hear her."

Mr. Kelly said, "I joke little about my illness because I didn't want to worry my family." He went on to say, "They were trying to help me, and I was trying to reject them. It didn't work."

Advice to Doctors

Mr. Kelly said that to achieve better communication between patients and their families, doctors must deal honestly with them to help them understand the disease and its treatment to correct any misconceptions.

Mr. Kelly said he has disapproved his illness with his two boys and two daughters, ranging in age from six to 18, and that "while they like the fact that I'm dying, they are coping with it."

Organizing Make Today Count

Mr. Kelly said that a nonprofit group supported by individuals and organizations has more than 370 personal letters and received more than 5,000 letters and telephone calls from patients and families of patients.

Mr. Kelly said that he had seen "bombarded" by doctors and organizations recommending unproved methods of cancer treatment, especially treatment with laetrile, a derivative of apricot pits.

Mr. Kelly said that a person left me with a bottle of brown liquid which he said contained a newly discovered cure. Mr. Kelly said, "During the winter the bottle froze, the bottle burst and the stuff peeled the paint on my refrigerator door." He said, "I think the people who want to sell me this should realize, I should keep looking for a miracle should realize, I have, that the miracle has already occurred—because, I have lived more than the past two years than the preceding years combined."

Mr. Kelly has written a book, "Today Count," entitled, "Today Count," which was published last summer by the "Press of New York," an organization can be reached at Box 303, Burlington, Iowa, 52601.

Ford Against Foreign-Aid Rise for Israel

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 30—President Ford told Congressional conferees today that he strongly opposed a plan to increase the foreign-aid package so that Israel could receive $500 million additional this year.

Until today, the Ford Administration and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had told Congress that while they did not seek the supplemental aid—amounting to some $500 million in overall economic and military programs, of which Israel would get about $300 million—they would not object if Congress appropriated that amount.

The amount in question would be part of a special appropriation to bridge the three-month gap between the old fiscal year of 1976 ending on June 30 and the start of the new fiscal year for 1977 beginning on Oct. 1 under the new fiscal system.

"Transitional Quarter"
 In the 1976 foreign-aid appropriations bill passed by the Senate, the supplemental for the so-called "transitional quarter" is included.

The House version of the bill omits any special appropriation for the transitional quarter. The House-Senate conferees on appropriations were supposed to meet this afternoon, but after receiving the letter from Mr. Ford, the members agreed to put off the session until Thursday.

Before today's developments, Israeli supporters had asserted that they had enough backing in the conference to insure that the House would accept the Senate version. Late today, a canvass of these supporters found continued optimism, but an also some irritation with Mr. Ford.

The President's letter, which was made available by conferees, said:

"I strongly oppose Senate action adding nearly $800 million in program terms to my budget request for foreign military sales credits and security support assistance for the transitional quarter."

Extra Period Considered
 Mr. Ford said that "in formulating my proposal for fiscal year 1976 I took into account the added requirements of the transitional quarter."

He said, in an allusion to Israel, that "although I would like to be able to do more for our allies and friends, I am firmly convinced that the total level of funds already requested in fiscal 1976 as distributed in my original request are adequate to meet the minimum needs of the recipients without placing unacceptable strains on our budget."

Mr. Kissinger has repeatedly told Israeli officials and members of Congress that the Administration would not oppose the additional aid, although it was not seeking it. Israeli diplomats have been told that Mr. Ford at the last minute sided with his budget advisers and overruled Mr. Kissinger—although this could not be confirmed tonight.

The extra $500 million has been a major goal of Israeli supporters because in the fiscal 1977 foreign-aid request, the Administration is seeking $1.8 billion, a reduction of $500 million from the $2.3 billion sought for the 1976 year, and cut by Congress to $2.2 billion.

Before money can be allocated, it must be approved in an authorization bill and in an appropriations bill. The President's letter opposing the extra funds was addressed to the conferees taking up the fiscal 1976 appropriations bill.

As expected, conferees dealing with the authorization bill for fiscal 1976 today approved a measure that would include the additional funds for the transitional quarter.

The bill, which now must be approved routinely by both houses, also contained restrictions on foreign aid to countries systematically violating human rights, or discriminating against American employees on the basis of race, religion or national origin—both measures opposed by the Administration.

Total military sales were also limited to $9 billion annually, but can be waived by the President.

Syria has repeatedly sought to stop the factional strife in Lebanon, which has taken thousands of lives in the last year. At the time of cease-fire in January, the Syrians sent three battalions of the Palestine Liberation Army, incorporated into their army, across the border to try to separate Moslem and Christian forces in Lebanon.

According to the intelligence reports reaching here, the battalions more or less disintegrated as many of their members joined the left-wing Moslem and Palestinian guerrilla fighters. The Syrian leadership can no longer count on their accepting orders from Damascus, the reports said.

In that situation, there has been widespread speculation that President Assad might order Syrian soldiers into Lebanon to impose peace. Israel has warned that it would react if the Syrian Army moved into Lebanon in force, presumably by sending Israeli units over the Lebanese-Israeli border.

Both Iraq and Egypt have reasons for not wanting the Syrians to take over in Lebanon. Egypt has come under harsh criticism from Damascus for its Sinai troop disengagement agreement with Israel last fall, which in effect took the Egyptians out of the Arab-Israeli conflict for three years. Syria has sought to take over the Egyptian role as leader of the Arab cause.

The New York Times/March 31, 1976

Iraq reportedly threatened to send troops into neighboring Syria and to fly help to Beirut if Syrians intervened.

747 in Forced Landing After Striking a Hyena

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—A 747 jumbo jet carrying 379 persons to Frankfurt hit a hyena on take-off at Nairobi airport early today and was forced to make an emergency landing at the airport nearly two hours later, British Airways reported.

An airline statement said no one was injured.

One of the jet's 18 tires burst and slight fuselage damage was reported.

The pilot circled Nairobi airport to consume fuel before landing.

The airport is near Nairobi National Park, a 44-square-mile preserve. The runway, eighteen miles from central Nairobi, was a favorite spot for professional lion hunters a generation ago.

FORD AND HUSSEIN ASK BEIRUT TRUCE

Urge a Political Solution—U.S. Ships Near Lebanon for Possible Evacuation

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

WASHINGTON, March 30—President Ford and King Hussein of Jordan issued today a joint appeal for a cease-fire and a political solution in Lebanon as American diplomats stepped up efforts behind the scenes to help arrange an end to the fighting.

Because of the deteriorating situation, seven American warships have been sent to the eastern Mediterranean for possible evacuation duty. The State Department later announced that L. Dean Brown, a former envoy, had been dispatched to Beirut to take temporary charge of the embassy and offer his services as a mediator. Mr. Brown, who now heads the Middle East Institute, a nonprofit organization, has been instructed to seek a cease-fire and help work toward a political solution in Lebanon. The current ambassador, G. McMurtrie Godley, has been in Washington recuperating from surgery. The joint declaration issued at the White House after a meeting between Mr. Ford and the visiting Jordanian leader stressed the need for "a basic political solution" in Lebanon "that gives adequate opportunity and security to all Lebanese groups and maintains their independence, territorial integrity and national unity of the country."

Syrian Support Seen

It was viewed by American officials as a significant statement because King Hussein has just come from Syria where he and President Hafez al-Assad discussed his trip to Washington. Thus, it was assumed that King Hussein was speaking with the endorsement of the Syrians on the Lebanese crisis. Pentagon officials said that the seven ships sent to the Eastern Mediterranean were a five-ship amphibious group, headed by the helicopter carrier Guadalcanal, and two destroyers, the Wood and the Marhat, the latter a guided-missile destroyer. Officials said a normal complement of 1,700 marines was assigned to the group, which is attached to the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean.

No orders have been given to begin evacuation of the 1,450 American citizens, including 45 embassy officers, or of foreigners endangered Lebanese, officials said. But ever since the cease-fire broke down again in Lebanon, the United States has been increasingly concerned with the inability of the Syrians and other mediators to bring about a new truce or to formulate a political solution that takes account of both Christian and Moslem interests.

Lebanon Main Topic

The White House said most of the 75-minute meeting between King Hussein and Mr. Ford this morning was devoted to the Lebanon situation. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who took part in the meeting and later gave a luncheon for the Jordanian ruler at the State Department, said that Lebanon had been the dominant subject, with Middle East peace issues put off to later in the visit. Mr. Kissinger stressed that the United States was using its influence to try to bring about a cease-fire as "a first step" toward a political solution to keep Lebanon from falling apart, he said. "We are in close touch with Syria and other Arab countries and also are in touch with some of the parties in Lebanon to see what we can do to be helpful." In public and in private, Mr. Kissinger has praised the Syrian mediation efforts in Lebanon, but there has been concern that, out of frustration, the Syrians may send their own military units into Lebanon to restore order.

Israeli Moves a Factor

This, in turn, would create the risk of Israeli countermoves into southern Lebanon, but Israeli officials have stressed in recent days that they would intervene in Lebanon only if Israel's security was endangered. So far, Syria has refrained from introducing its own forces and has made efforts to bring about a new cease-fire. Mr. Kissinger said last week, in remarks made public today, that "there is nothing we can do physically" in Lebanon, "but we are trying to bring home to all of the parties concerned the consequences of irresponsible action." "We have strongly warned all outside countries, including Israel and including Syria, against rash military moves, because the United States could not support unilateral intervention," he said to a group of foreign diplomats on March 22. The State Department released the text today. King Hussein, his left arm in a cast as the result of a karate accident, was greeted at the White House by Mr. Ford in formal ceremonies. He told the President that "with the problems the still face the world, the wisdom and fortitude that have marked your past is needed now more than ever."

Currency Crisis Threatens Europe's Unity

By FLORA LEWIS

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, March 30—There are still optimists as well as pessimists among top European officials, but the conviction is spreading that Europe is at another crucial crossroads on its tortuous path to unity and is about to take the wrong fork. The currency crisis, with the French franc abandoning the effort to keep up with the West German mark and joining the anchorless British and Irish pounds in their decline, has provided the dramatic backdrop.

Vague hopes remain that somehow the francs of Belgium and Luxembourg, the Dutch guilder, the Danish and associated Swedish and Norwegian kroner can stay in the ring with the mark so that a core of sturdy currencies can keep the fading vision of monetary union alive until the laggards regain strength. But the money troubles reflect deeper political problems that are both cause and effect of the simple fact that the European movement never got much beyond commercial exchange.

These issues will be the focus of the European leadership meeting in Luxembourg at the end of this week. The meeting was supposed to have been the occasion for important new advances for Europe. Instead, it will have to be devoted to attempts to patch and mend the fraying fabric of cooperation.

It has become obvious to politicians that the whole idea of progress toward unity has to be linked to the pace of the weakest—Britain and Italy—or else the able must be separated from the laggards. The French-German relation is the crucial one. The central issue now is whether France's President, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, and West Germany's Chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, can agree on a coordinated economic policy. If not, there is scarcely any basis for agreement of the Nine, and paralysis, even decay, of existing community ties seems unavoidable.

The reason monetary agreements have nearly collapsed is that the nine Common Market members, for domestic political reasons, have managed their economies in very different ways. West Germany, still haunted by the nightmare inflation that destroyed the Weimar Republic and brought it to Hitler and World War II, has kept its money on a relatively tight rein. There are other reasons for the West German economic success, but they all add up to a fairly successful fight against inflation supported by labor unions.

France, Britain and Italy have sought to make up for their inability to compete well enough on export markets by eroding the value of their money, by using brief periods of domestic content with rising wages and prices but selling cheaper to foreigners. After years of argument between Bonn and Paris, it has finally become conventional European wisdom that Europe cannot achieve a common monetary policy, let alone a common economic policy. And economic policy is the bread and butter of domestic politics.

It was only partly coincidental that France announced it was pulling its money out of the fixed-rate agreement hours after polls closed in nationwide local elections where the Socialist-Communist opposition scored a majority of votes. President Giscard d'Estaing had joined the agreement last year to show his political will to advance the European ideal. But he would not or could not take the internal political risks to make it work, and the wish to show himself a "good European" did not win him any votes.

Now the effort seems to be over for the time being. Negotiations are continuing in an endeavor to find some looser, more flexible way to avoid slipping straight back to a situation where every country fights for its own advantage on the market. But no one denies that there has been a sharp setback to European progress.

In prospect are the direct elections for a European parliament, tentatively scheduled for spring of 1978, at President Giscard d'Estaing's insistence. It is a telling test, because it doesn't cost any money. It is a straight political matter—do the Europeans really want to get on with building a united European power of some kind, or don't they?

The elections were foreseen in the Treaty of Rome but never yet held. The purpose of holding them was to revive the European dynamic by providing democratic participation and eventually some vote control over Europe's fully empowered bureaucracy, behind the backs of national governments.

At their meeting in Luxembourg Thursday and Friday, the leaders will either plunge forward and sign a definite agreement on the elections, or let the timetable slip. Privately, they say flatly that slippage now means virtual failure of the idea. There won't be another chance to get it going for a long time.

France holds the key. Its Government has decided to give top priority to the domestic scene in hopes of winning enough votes back from the left to retain power after the 1978 French parliamentary elections, which can't be postponed.

Only a minority of the French—Communists and Socialists—are against European elections but they are vocal and the race in France is so tight that Paris feels that every vote counts. In Italy, it is the crisis of the lira that has finally driven the Government to consult the Communists, the key to any firm austerity program because of their hold on the unions.

The postwar history of industrial Europe has shown that there is no way to sustain or revive a healthy economy in battle with the unions. Both the successes—West Germany, Sweden and Switzerland—and the failures—Italy and Britain—have made the point.

Because it failed to win the kind of popular support would enable it to identify with labor.

It will have to take with the Communists or let it go. A different kind of labor Party, adding tails of the Socialist to Man-eater party coming to share France.

The Italian Communist Party are for the Communist while the Frenchists say they want it. Either way, with Communists in France and Italy bound to cause a surge in the European city, as well as an alliance.

In Britain, the tradition of a strong left (not Communist) who stress a kind of class-neutral, effectiveness, has made it difficult to switch to a more national economic method.

These politics, economic measures, and the economic decide who gets the vital split.

The vital split in European road has passed, but it is common to see the Government is making a mistake.

It is hard to see how to agree on the issues that common sense.

The political calendar makes it difficult for the current leaders to take steps to align their economies and the outlook this year, the door may not be open.

Boys will be men.

There are times when a boy wants to look like a man.

And there's no store in the world that can help him dress the part as well as Barney's Boystown.

Only here can a son who admires his dad's English suits find elegant suits by Kenneth Reed tailored in the same English tradition. As well as sophisticated designer suits by such worldly men's designers as Pierre Cardin and Michel de Lisle.

Of course, as beautifully as Barney's caters to Bar Mitzvahs, Confirmations and weddings, we also cater to those informal occasions when boys will be boys. With a vast collection of casual fashions. Ranging from fields of rugby shirts by Izod to rugged boot jeans by Levi's.

And whether your boy is the slimmest slim or the huskiest husky, we'll give him the same man-sized selection.

Jackson, in Wisconsin, Assails Carter and Udall Records on the Right-to-Work Legislation

OSSE, Wis., March 30
Henry M. Jackson
Washington barnstormed rainy Wisconsin today of propeller-driven challenging the labor of Jimmy Carter and ative Morris K. Udall. series of airport news-es before appearing in Milwaukee's Serb Hall tonight, the Senator said "Congressman
Mr. Carter took sup-light-to-work [laws]"
with Gov. George C.
Alabama. Mr. Udall
Carter are Senator principal rivals in Democratic Pres-idental primary election next Tuesday.

Mr. Jackson indicated that the past positions of his rivals on the right-to-work issue assured him of strong labor backing at the polls.
Mr. Udall voted against repeal of the right-to-work section of the Taft-Hartley Act in the mid-50's, but has insisted that he had the consent of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in Alabama, which recognized the political necessity of the position when in that conservative area. He has said since that as President he would lead the fight to repeal the section, which says union membership need not be a condition for employment.
Mr. Carter, who supports

Georgia's right-to-work law when he was Governor, has said recently that he would sign a bill repealing the section, but would not actively work to obtain it.
Jackson Is Heckled
MADISON, Wis., March 30
(AP)—Senator Jackson was heckled and apparently spat upon here today.
The incident occurred as the Senator alighted from a plane and protesters yelled slogans against Boeing Aircraft Inc., a major defense contractor with headquarters in Mr. Jackson's home state of Washington.
Moisture hit Mr. Jackson in the face as he approached a fence flanked by Secret Service men. The police and Secret Service men quickly hustled away a young demonstrator.

The Senator's face was wired with a Secret Service man's handkerchief.
Mr. Jackson, appearing shaken, was asked what his reply. "Water, junk," he replied.
But his news secretary, Brian Corcoran, said the Senator "was spit on by somebody."
Carter Assails Jackson
Special to The New York Times
WAUSAU, Wis., March 30—
Mr. Carter seized the occasion of Senator Jackson's remarks on the situation in Lebanon to day to charge the Washington Democrat with a habitually "waitlike attitude" toward other nations.

When the two Presidential candidates' paths crossed only a few minutes apart here this afternoon, reporters with the Jackson entourage relayed Mr.
Jackson's observation that six months ago the United States might wisely have offered the Christian Government in Lebanon use of American Navy and Marines to calm civil strife with Lebanon's Muslim insurgents.
Precisely what sort of action
Mr. Jackson had in mind was unclear to reporters and also to Mr. Carter, who got somewhat conflicting accounts of Mr. Jackson's news conference remarks.

[At his first campaign stop this morning, in Milwaukee, Senator Jackson's response to a question gave some reporters the impression that he was advocating United States military action in the Lebanon situation. Later in the day, however, the Senator amplified his remarks, saying the Ford Administration should have offered this country's "good offices" in some way to work out a buffer-zone settlement in Lebanon with the cooperation of the United Nations.]
Wallace Still in Race
MADISON, Wis., March 30—

Governor Wallace said today that he would remain a candidate so long as big government was on the "backs" of the middle class.
There have been rumors this week that he might cut short his Wisconsin campaign and return to Alabama before next Tuesday's primary, but he declared flatly this afternoon during a meeting with the Madison Optimist Club that he would "stay in this game until they [Government bureaucrats] leave us alone."
The Governor has yet to win a primary victory, and polls taken recently in Wisconsin indicate that he is headed for still another serious setback on April 6.

Half a dozen demonstrators jeered Mr. Wallace when he arrived at a suburban restaurant for his meeting with the Optimists.
Several of the demonstrators wore face masks imprinted with the smiling countenance of Arthur H. Bremer, the Wisconsin man convicted and imp-oned for shooting the Governor in the 1972 Presidential campaign. They pushed wheeled chairs called Mr. Wallace "ratchet pig" and chanted "F Artie Bremer."
The Wisconsin Government Patrick J. Lynch, issued a public apology for the incident, then spoke briefly with

NEW YORK LABOR IS DELEGATES

Influential Role at Democratic Convention

ROHAN
New York labor movement is making efforts to be influential at the 1976 national New Democratic Convention in New York City.
The union officials are running for delegates will be elected to the 39 Congressional District Unions also are of a generous 68 delegates chosen by the State after the primary.
Sympathies of its are now four of the Democratic Presidential winning delegates and to vote for the candidate whom they are considering for the first ballot. It is no wonder, then, labor leaders believe, they form a bloc both within the convention and with other delegates from around the country in backing a presidential nominee with strong labor ties.

Looking for Candidates
New York labor sweepstakes Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington is in the top 42 union supporters and across 25 of his 36 states which list a total of 10 candidates.
Representative Morris K.
Udall of Arizona, who has 150 union delegates, is second with 100 labor members on 20 states.
Senator Fred R. Harrington of Oklahoma, with 99 candidates a total of 26 unionists, 11 of his 22 states.
Governor Jimmy Carter, the former of Georgia, with 142 delegates on 30 states, trails by three million members, one slate and one on one slate.

Konosshima, the Carter coordinator, contends that the Georgian's poor standing does not reflect anti-Carter sentiment among labor organizations.
When the Carter organization initially approached
New York labor leaders, he said they did not consider Mr.
Carter a serious candidate in the State and they wanted their people to be convinced. "Further approaches are too late," he said.

D.P. Ties Weakened
The Republican side, the links with labor forged by President Rockefeller in his 15-year tenure as Governor, had been badly weakened.
A spokesman for the state committee said he did not know how many unionists would be on its 154-member list, but he said all of them have already been declined without contests. But the number is expected to be another bid for influence at the Democratic convention, top-ranking New York labor leaders have endorsed national hopefuls, with Mr.

Carter and Mr. Udall getting major shares. Mr. Jackson led the front-runner in New York, and Mr. Udall hopes to finish a strong union activity is part of a system established by the labor leadership of the American Federation of Labor Congress of Industrial Organizations, which has urged labor organizations and individuals, such as the Central Council here, to be neutral in the primaries and encouraged individual and members to participate.

The A.F.L.-C.I.O. unions
step further and formed a coalition to persuade Presidential hopefuls to put candidates on their slates and to urge members to run so labor would have substantial representation at the convention. This coalition was

Colorado Town Cool to Campaign

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

YUMA, Colo.—The weather has been hot but the political temperature is still cool these days in Yuma, small, relatively prosperous, relatively conservative rural community on the prairie of northeast Colorado.

After six weeks of Presidential campaigning, neither candidates nor the issues are politically warmed up here. 2,500 or so Yumans, who are being visited at intervals during the election year—long with voters in suburban urban and small-city communities, to get their views on the campaign.

Farmers, now busy with spring planting, felt after a second visit that no candidate had yet addressed himself to the issue of overriding importance here: agriculture.

"I'm not excited about any of them," Neel Leathers, manager of the Co-Op grain elevator, said of the Presidential aspirants. His opinion was echoed again and again in the dusty streets, skied by 75-degree days, as well as in the cool farmhouses and coffee shops.

Underlying the Skepticism Underlying Yuma's skeptical attitude toward the election so far is a deep-felt cynicism about how much of farm vote means in national terms and how much any politician can do for individuals.

They're not too interested in supporting anybody because they think any President could betray them," reported Bill Wenger, a Democrat who is the head of the school board, after breakfast at the Baron Restaurant with several farmers. "Our vote doesn't count any more."

Harvey Pletcher, a Republican county commissioner, added: "I just don't think it's possible to get a President who is interested in agriculture."

Nevertheless, some breezes of political opinion are beginning to stir. Yuma started out as Republican territory, but many of its conservatives—who include many Democrats—were awfully laddered when Ronald Reagan finally defeated President Ford in the North Carolina primary.

Assailed for Export Curb Mr. Ford is held responsible by many Yuma residents for "knocking under" labor unions by putting the steel moratorium or exports of wheat to the Soviet Union last summer.

What is one of the important crops here and in the yards of Sherman Blach, a farmer and the Republican county chairman. "Ford hasn't mended his fences as far as rural agriculture is concerned. The wheat deal still sticks in the craw."

"Carter is for real," declared J. A. Spiers, a banker and Democrat. Referring to charges against Mr. Carter by Lester Maddox, Dr. Richard Hemphill, the local dentist and a Republican, said, "If he's a liar, he's the nicest liar I ever saw."

"We got a boy who's comin' up," said another Democrat, Calvin Burton, a 53-year-old plumbing serviceman. "That's Jimmy Carter." He went on, sipping coffee in the Wooden Spoon on Main Street. "He's a pretty nice fella. I think he's a plain, common man. The way he talks to people and that smile—ain't that smile somethin'?"

Mr. Ford is held responsible by many Yuma residents for "knocking under" labor unions by putting the steel moratorium or exports of wheat to the Soviet Union last summer.

What we need is to sweep Washington clean and put new people in there," said Evelyn Tweddell in her Vogue zine legislator said. "I am proud that people who like Hubert Humphrey find me an acceptable candidate."

Conceding that it was "a fine distinction," a former Humphrey aide said he was not sure how much of this is coming directly from the Senator and how much is coming from people on his staff and supporters in Wisconsin.

Mr. Udall had no move toward Mr. Humphrey, however, "Hubert is a big boy, and if he wanted this kind of thing to stop, he knows perfectly well how to stop it."

Representative David R. Obey, whose district embraces much of northern Wisconsin, was one of the original sponsors of the Udall campaign and is close to Mr. Humphrey. But he said in a telephone interview that he had not, as some local reports suggested, served as an intermediary.

To Give a Choice "I believe that if you want a choice at the convention, you have to want Mr. Udall to beat Jimmy Carter in Wisconsin," he said. "I have told everyone I talk to that that's my view. Including a lot of friends of Humphrey."

The new signals from Mr. Humphrey have caused some confusion in Wisconsin. For example, John Schmitt, the president of the state labor federation who has been a backer of Mr. Humphrey for years, made a commitment to Mr. Jackson and has campaigned for him. Many politicians in the state took that as an indication that the Jackson candidacy was the "safe haven" of the Humphrey lovers in Wisconsin.

In addition, there is a 25-member committee that has been urging Democrats

Beauty Salon the other morning, while many of her customers and helpers nodded their heads. Some of the other women also agreed that the country's military strength was "a mess."

Mr. Blach, like many others, said it was too early to talk about whom people would vote for in the polling booths. Moreover, Colorado's complicated, drawn-out caucus system for choosing delegates, which will not be completed until summer, has not produced the flurry of activity that primaries or one-shot caucuses have in other states.

The Republican county chairman suggested that a Ford-Reagan ticket would be formidable, though unlikely. "I don't think they'll be able to get in bed together," he said.

The often expressed yearning for new faces has produced a ripple of interest in Jimmy Carter, whose name was barely mentioned by Yumans in early February. He's been a pleasant surprise to some of them. Despite seeing him repeatedly on television, they are willing to hear more.

"Carter is for real," declared J. A. Spiers, a banker and Democrat. Referring to charges against Mr. Carter by Lester Maddox, Dr. Richard Hemphill, the local dentist and a Republican, said, "If he's a liar, he's the nicest liar I ever saw."

CALLAWAY QUILTS AS CAMPAIGN HEAD

Ford Names Morton to Post and Voices Confidence in Departing Chairman

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 30—President Ford replaced Howard H. Callaway today as chairman of the President's campaign organization, naming Rogers C. B. Morton to succeed him.

The President said he was "absolutely sure" that Mr. Callaway would be cleared of charges that he had used improper influence, while he was Secretary of the Army, to seek Government approval of plans to expand a ski resort Mr. Callaway controls in Colorado. Even so, Mr. Ford accepted a formal letter of resignation that Mr. Callaway submitted last night and designated Mr. Morton, a White House counsel, former Cabinet member and onetime Representative from Maryland, to take charge of the campaign.

Change Was Predicted

White House aides determined that the investigation of Mr. Callaway's conduct not be permitted to taint Mr. Ford's bid for a full term as President, had forecast the change in campaign leadership two weeks ago.

In a letter to Mr. Callaway that was made public this afternoon, the President said he was "deeply saddened" by the resignation "because I am confident that the allegations raised recently will be proven groundless."

At a brief, rather stiff meeting in the Oval Office, Mr. Ford stood between Mr. Morton and Mr. Callaway and voiced full confidence in the departing chairman.

On the basis of 15 years of friendship and "close personal experience," the President said, "I know very deeply in my own heart that Howard H. Callaway is an absolutely honest person."

The Departments of Justice and Agriculture, the Civil Liberties Board and the Senate subcommittee investigating allegations that Mr. Callaway used improper influence to secure Government rulings that benefited his ski resort in Crested Butte, Colo.

Mr. Callaway and White House officials insisted in interviews today that there had been no "zero pressure on me" to resign.

Mr. Ford praised his departing campaign chairman as "a man who is called a 'typically unselfish' decision maker. It would not be helpful to the campaign to continue indefinitely on a leave of absence until the inquiries were completed.

But Mr. Callaway acknowledged at a news conference late today that he had met with Richard B. Cheney, the White House chief of staff, to try to head off a demand for his resignation then. Mr. Callaway reportedly asked at that meeting if he could be asked to resign in the name of the campaign.

"I was very upset," Mr. Callaway said. "It looked like they were arranging ways of trying to push me out."

Sought Early Exoneration But he added that he obtained consent to an effort—perhaps "naïve," he conceded—to win exoneration by the end of this month.

Mr. Callaway said he realized yesterday that he would have to resign when his lawyer, Jerome Leonard, a former Assistant Attorney General, was unable to determine how long the central inquiry by the Justice Department would take.

"They couldn't promise [a decision] by the end of next week," Mr. Callaway said. Accordingly, he said he submitted a letter of resignation last night. By one White House account, Mr. Ford commiserated with Mr. Callaway and described the situation as "a real shame."

White House spokesmen said Mr. Ford had made no effort to determine from any of the investigating agencies whether there were grounds for the allegations about Mr. Callaway's conduct.

Nonetheless, the President said he was "absolutely sure" he will be completely exonerated and "I know he feels that personally."

The resignation is to be effective this Friday, Mr. Callaway's 49th birthday. Mr. Morton, who is 61, was old and is a one-time chairman of the Republican National Committee and former Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of Commerce, will take charge of the campaign.

Mr. Morton, who became the President's political counselor in the White House on Feb. 1, was said to have been reluctant to become campaign chairman.

"You always have to twist my arm," another White House official said. "But he's not going to get rolled." Mr. Callaway told reporters that he bore no ill will toward anyone in the White House, especially the President. "I believe in him wholeheartedly," he said of Mr. Ford.

But Mr. Callaway said he

U.S. Aide on Air Force Flight to Callaway

WASHINGTON, March 30—Secretary John L. McLucas and Navy Secretary J. William Middendorf had attended a meeting that week at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Mr. Callaway said.

Afterwards, Mr. Clements, Mr. Callaway and Mr. Dawkins flew up to Gunnison, Colo., on an Air Force C-131. Mrs. Bass flew from the academy to Gunnison and back to Denver.

A Pentagon spokesman described this as a "diversion" from an official flight, permitted under then-existing regulations. New regulations have been issued this month, and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has said that if he had been on the plane, he would have paid the cost of the 20-minute flight.

Mr. Callaway, who was then in the Atlanta Secretariat of the Army, finished with politics.

Mr. Callaway also complained that the network had broadcast radio charges without checking with Mr. Clements were Rita and plane fare for Mrs. Bass.

The Saab Philosophy, No. 2 in a Series:

"WE BELIEVE HOW FAST A CAR GOES SLOW IS AS IMPORTANT AS HOW FAST A CAR GOES FAST."

When you're heading down the highway at 55 mph, you probably don't think about how fast you can stop. Until somebody stops in front of you. We thought about it, however, when we first designed the Saab. And that's why we equipped it with big, power-assisted disc brakes on all four wheels (not just two like a lot of cars). Of course, braking is only important if you're going, so we gave the Saab strong, two-liter, fuel-injected, overhead cam engine to get it going. And to make the driver and passengers feel even more secure, the Saab has front-wheel drive, rack-and-pinion steering and roll cage construction. To really appreciate the Saab philosophy, however, you must drive the result, the new Saab 99 GL. It will make you a believer... fast.

Humphrey Effort to Block Carter Seen

Continued From Page 1, Col. 3. Mr. Humphrey's friends in organized labor, some of whom have been backing Mr. Jackson, were reading the word this week that the way to help elect Mr. Udall was to back Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Carter.

Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Carter have been engaged in a long-distance sniping contest more than a week. Yesterday in Madison the Senator criticized Mr. Carter's statement advocating support of Mr. Udall at 80 percent of the price and added, apparently in reference to the Georgian, "It's not good enough to be a nice fella."

No Agreement Seen According to farm sources in Minnesota officials of the National Farmers Union who are close to Mr. Humphrey, he unsuccessfully dissuaded Robert Robde, the Wisconsin Federation of Labor leader, from endorsing Mr. Carter.

There is no indication that Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Udall have worked out any agreement. Mr. Udall said in an interview this afternoon that he had made no direct overtures to the former Vice President concerning Wisconsin.

"I don't look askance at the offer for support," the Arizona legislator said. "I am proud that people who like Hubert Humphrey find me an acceptable candidate."

Conceding that it was "a fine distinction," a former Humphrey aide said he was not sure how much of this is coming directly from the Senator and how much is coming from people on his staff and supporters in Wisconsin.

Mr. Udall had no move toward Mr. Humphrey, however, "Hubert is a big boy, and if he wanted this kind of thing to stop, he knows perfectly well how to stop it."

Representative David R. Obey, whose district embraces much of northern Wisconsin, was one of the original sponsors of the Udall campaign and is close to Mr. Humphrey. But he said in a telephone interview that he had not, as some local reports suggested, served as an intermediary.

To Give a Choice "I believe that if you want a choice at the convention, you have to want Mr. Udall to beat Jimmy Carter in Wisconsin," he said. "I have told everyone I talk to that that's my view. Including a lot of friends of Humphrey."

The new signals from Mr. Humphrey have caused some confusion in Wisconsin. For example, John Schmitt, the president of the state labor federation who has been a backer of Mr. Humphrey for years, made a commitment to Mr. Jackson and has campaigned for him. Many politicians in the state took that as an indication that the Jackson candidacy was the "safe haven" of the Humphrey lovers in Wisconsin.

In addition, there is a 25-member committee that has been urging Democrats

Buffalo Visit Out WASHINGTON, March 30 (UPI)—Senator Humphrey's scheduled visit to Buffalo tomorrow has been canceled because of a Senate Foreign Relations Committee meeting, his office said today. However, he will be going to New York City tomorrow as scheduled, his office said.

Open a $400 savings account at Manufacturers Hanover and we'll give you unlimited checking for only $1 a month.

The minimum balance of $400 in an interest-earning regular savings account, instead of the $500 some other banks require, is just one reason why we say Super Checking is really super.

Compare Super Checking with any checking account or combination account in town and we think you'll agree.

Do you pay a monthly service charge plus 10¢ or 15¢ for every check you write? Most people do. If you write a lot of checks, that could cost you plenty.

Even if you write only three checks a month, Super Checking can save you money.

With Super Checking, your $1 monthly service charge covers an unlimited number of checks. And you're earning a full 5% interest in your regular savings balance.

You can get at your savings at any time.

You can make savings withdrawals at any time, without losing any of the interest you've earned. If your savings balance should fall below the $400 minimum, a $3 service charge would be applied to your checking account for that month.

And you get a lot more, too. Like being able to withdraw from your savings or cash checks at any of our over 180 branches.

And you can apply for overdraft privileges which keep your checks from bouncing and even allow you to write yourself an instant loan.

The last thing this city needs is another checking and savings plan, unless it really is super. We think ours is. You can even come out ahead. That's why it's called Super Checking. It's another one of the things we're doing to make your banking easier.

Oscar Makes Nicholson Fame Official

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, March 30—In the moments after Jack Nicholson bounded off the stage of the Los Angeles Music Center last night, a grin on his face and a gleaming Oscar in his hands, one of the first things he said was: "God, isn't it fantastic?"

Hollywood had at last certified that many critics had been saying for some time—that Mr. Nicholson, who began acting in low-budget films here almost 20 years ago and scored his first major success in "Easy Rider" in 1969, had reached the top of Hollywood's acting hierarchy.

Louise Fletcher using sign language to speak to her parents over television after receiving an Academy Award for best actress on Monday evening.

Mr. Nicholson won an award for best performance by an actor from the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences for "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." He was reported to have been bitter and disappointed after having been an also-ran in four other Oscar movies, including losses in the best-actor category during each of the last two years for "Hombre" in 1960 and "Chinatown" in 1974.

The crowd seemed to be on his side, too, for Mr. Nicholson received one of the loudest ovations of the night.

Race With Excitement
 The 39-year-old New Jersey native, who frequently portrays an outsider bucking the system, as he did in "Cuckoo's Nest," "The Last Detail" and "Five Easy Pieces," seemed almost to react with excitement after collecting his award. "I'm shaken and surprised," he said, and then repeated it, and swore exuberantly.

In what has generally not been regarded as a vintage year for high-quality films, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," a filmed version of Ken Kesey's novel about a man in an Oregon mental institution, achieved what no other film had done since "It Happened One Night" in 1934.

It was selected not only as the best film of the year, but also won the top acting award—Mr. Nicholson's antagonist in the film, Louise Fletcher, won the award for best performance by an actress in the leading role. Milos Forman was voted best director, and Lawrence H. Hauben and Bo Goldman won for their screenplay adaptation of Mr. Kesey's novel.

George Burns, who is 80 years old, won the award for best supporting actor for "The Sunshine Boys" and Lee Grant, in her third nomination in this category, won an Oscar for her supporting actress role in "Shampoo."

Low Production Figure
 Reflecting the recent decline in film production here, only 227 motion pictures were eligible for the awards, down from 264 last year, and the lowest in many years.

At Hollywood social gatherings recently, it has been common for members of the Motion Picture Academy to admit that they were having difficulty deciding whom to vote for in some categories, not so much because of intense competition for outstanding performances, but what they perceived as being few performances meriting consideration for an Oscar.

Blaming mounting production costs rooted in inflation, and a recent renewed surge of high-wage demands by some top stars, most of the major studios have been making fewer and fewer films. "They all say they only want to make blockbusters," a well-known film writer-director said during a conversation last night.

"They think they've found a secret formula—make just a few films that make a lot of money, and the heck with whether the critics like them or not," he said. "They think you can put it all in a computer—that if you have such a star you can be sure it will bring in $64 million in rentals, and if you put in so and so, then you'll get $115 million."

Some Upturn Foreseen
 This year, movie makers expect to see an upturn in film production, but still well below the volume of the late 1960's.

Curiously, "Jaws" which became Hollywood's top money maker only a few months after it reached the screen last year, collected only three Oscars for best original musical score, editing and sound. Although it was nominated for best picture, its director, Steven Spielberg, was conspicuously absent from the list.

"Barry Lyndon," the Stanley Kubrick movie that many critics described as a beautifully photographed and executed but thematically thin tale of a likable rogue in 18th-century Europe, like "Cuckoo's Nest," won five Oscars. They were for cinematography, art direction, set decoration, costume design and best adapted-musical score.

Mervyn Leroy won the Irving G. Thalberg Award for his long career as a director, and Jules S. Stein, the longtime chief executive of MCA Inc., received the Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award for his work in helping to combat eye disease. Mary Pickford, who has not made a motion picture since 1933, received, in a filmed presentation at her home in Beverly Hills, a special Oscar for her years of movie making.

Other awards follow:
Best Short Subject—"Great," Grant-Tinker Ltd. Bob Godfrey, producer.
Best Short Subject—Live Action—"Big Joe," Bert Salzman Productions. Bert Salzman, producer.
Sound—"Jaws," by Robert L. Hoyt, Roger Herman, Earl Madry and John Carter.
Documentary Feature—"The Man Who Skied Down Everest," a Crawley Films Presentation. F. R. Crawley, James Hager and Dule Harlebin, producers.
Documentary Short Subject—"The End of the Game," Opus Films and Clair W. Blair and Robin Lehman, producers.
Costume Design—"Barry Lyndon," Ulla-Britt Soderland and John Carter.
Art Direction—"Barry Lyndon," Ken Adam and Roy Walker; set decoration, Vernon Dixon.
Original Music Score—"Jaws," John Williams.
Original Song Score and Adaptation or Best Scoring, Adaptation—"Barry Lyndon," adapted by Leonard Rosenman.
Cinematography—"Barry Lyndon," John Alcott.
Editing—"Jaws," Verna Fields.
Foreign Language Film—"Dersis Uzala," U.S.S.R.
Special Achievement—"I'm Easy" from "Kashville," Music and lyrics by Nash Carradine.
Original Screenplay—"Dog Day Afternoon," Frank Pierson.

Kesey, at Oregon Farm, Mulls Over Screen Rights

By LES LEDBETTER
Special to The New York Times

PLEASANT HILLS, Ore., March 30—Ken Kesey, his family and 15 friends and neighbors watched the Academy Awards here on television last night at his blueberry farm southeast of Eugene with a resigned sense of the absurd as the movie adaptation of his novel "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" won five Oscars.

Younger members of the merry band applauded and older friends smiled at Mr. Kesey and one another every time the movie adaptation won an award. But the winners of those awards were individually booed and derided when they did not acknowledge Mr. Kesey's authorship of "Cuckoo's Nest" while accepting their Oscars.

Only the film director, Milos Forman, mentioned Mr. Kesey at all in his speech accepting his own award for best director. But Mr. Forman did not identify the writer as the author of the book and the mention came while Mr. Kesey was in his milkshed, taking care of some last-minute chores.

Like a Pump Without Water
 "It was like pumps trying to say they're more important than the well and the water," Mr. Kesey said. "Last night it was pumps giving pumps awards for being good pumps."

Although the author said he had not seen the film, he predicted earlier in the evening that "Cuckoo's Nest" has to win because it has to be so much better than the others. "Yesterday afternoon Mr. Kesey said the film and its producers, Michael Douglas and Saul Zaentz, were "immortal" and that he was suing them for 3 percent of the movie's gross plus $800,000 in punitive damages for "breaking our verbal agreement and ruining the book."

When the televised ceremonies were over, Mr. Kesey switched off his battered color television set and said sadly, "They blew it; they just blew their big chance. 'Any one of them could have thanked me for writing the book and won all the arguments; but they blew their big chance to be in the big times, the big league.'"

Then he moved to the round dinner table in the converted barn where he and his family live for a game of penny-ante poker and a series of telephone conversations with friends and strangers calling to discuss the five top Academy Awards given to "Cuckoo"—the first time since "It Happened One Night" in 1934 that a single movie had enjoyed such a sweep.

Mr. Kesey complained that since his book was about the struggle for manhood by Chief Bromden, a "crazy Indian" in a mental institution, the movie adaptation should have been about him, rather than about the roustabout (played by Mr. Nicholson) who helps trigger the Indian's recovery.

"They didn't include the Indian, the book is about the Indian," said the author, almost incredulous that he has had to explain his anger and disappointment so many times that it's beginning to taste like copper pennies in my mouth."

Mr. Kesey said that there was a handshake and a verbal agreement between him and Mr. Douglas that he would get 2.5 percent of the gross for writing a screenplay and have some control over the adaptation.

Instead, said the author, all he got was $15,000 to care for himself, his wife, Fay, and their four children and the farm here for the year he wrote three versions of a screenplay.

Richardson Finds 'Iggins' a Lovely Change of Pace

it is intended as some kind of resolution—but what exactly was resolved seemed more elusive than ineluctable. Even the threatened storm never came.
Much more interesting and infinitely less pretentious were the two Humphrey minatures, both reconstructed by Ernestine Stoddell. The first dates from 1928, when Humphrey was still strongly under the Danishwau influence. This "Air for the G String" is a dance for five women in sky-blue robes. It has a simplicity and almost religious majesty to it that is softly effective.

In "Two Ecstatic Themes," a solo Humphrey created three years later, she is making a conscious kinetic experiment, in contrasting circular movement, to music by Medtner, and angular, upward movement to music by Malipiero. The contrast is clear, the body control by the dancer, Carla Maxwell, is ex-

Are Also Staged

emplary, and the brief yet pungent solo contains the germ of a real dance idea. It is a little gem.
In "The Shakers," Humphrey's splendidly sharp little vignette on Shaker rituals, the Eldress was being danced in New York for the first time by Jennifer Scanton, who also led, with authoritative style, the women in "Air for the G String."
There were also a few newcomers in "The Unsung," which opened the program.
This "pass" to the American Indian warriors, "The heroic defenders of the American patrimony," was always one of Limon's strongest. Formis-for his male dancers. Formistically it lacks something in focus, but the details are superb, and the men of the Limon company dance it with a lithe vigor that is great to watch.

Bill Evans Serves
A Dance of Tennis
With Precise Wit

Bill Evans's perception of character in his solo dance portraits is witty, economical and precise, while his larger-scaled works are frequently blurred and ungainly. They ramble along, quite pleasantly at times, but lack the quick decisiveness of the solo characterizations.
He presented half a dozen dances Monday evening at the American Theater Laboratory.
"What's Your Story Morning Glory" is a tale of a man in tennis whites in love with his racquet and his image of himself as a player. The music is vintage 1940's and so beautifully chosen that one suspects
Mr. Evans has a special fondness for the period. The man in white rolls, strolls and tum-bles along as his love affair with the racquet periodically bursts out in fervent embraces.
When he strides off, a tennis ball bounces merrily after him.

"Harold" sketches in the outline of a timid performer whose arms are tightly clasped to his sides and who makes tiny inhibited steps. At the end of each full circle a commanding female voice calls out his name and he defiantly drops a ping-pong ball from beneath an armpit. In a moment of final daring he drops an egg, but carefully catches the mess before leaving.
Mr. Evans and Gregg Lizenbery danced a strong duet in "Within Bounds." Kathleen Mc-Clintock joined them for "Tin-Tin," and Ann Asnes completed the trio for "Hard Times." They comprise a sleek quartet of dancers, but the material was never quite up to the snapshot-like portraits.
DON McDONAGH

Syracuse School Chief Quits
SYRACUSE, March 30 (AP)— Edwin Weeks, Superintendent of Schools here, notified the school board today that he would resign from his $40,214-a-year post next January. Mr.
Weeks has been superintendent of the state's fifth largest school district for the last

2 Points Not Enough for Ford, Lose 7th in Yanks Win

Michigan Republicans were paying off bets to Indiana Democrats yesterday as a result of Indiana's National Collegiate basketball championship victory over Michigan Monday night.

The losers were President Ford and Senator Robert P. Griffin. President Ford lost $5 to Senator Vance Hartke. Senator Griffin dribbled a basketball up the Senate steps, then presented the ball to Senator Birch Bayh.

President Ford had asked and received two points in his bet with Senator Hartke. Indiana won, 86-68.

Edd Roush, a member of the Hall of Fame, insisted that baseball must maintain the much-disputed reserve clause—even though it once cost him dearly.

Under the current proposed agreement between the players and the owners, which has all but wiped out the reserve clause binding a player to one team, Roush could have played out his option and sold himself to the highest bidder.

The 82-year-old Roush said, "That makes no difference. Do you want baseball? If you do, you've got to have the reserve clause or else you're gonna see players jumping all over the place. It's worse now than in the old days because they're getting such big salaries."

Connie Mack Jr., the son of one of baseball's most honored figures, was arrested in Fort Myers, Fla., on charges of bookmaking, wagering and engaging in a bookmaking scheme.

The charges stem from an investigation into illegal gambling by a statewide grand jury, authorities reported.

Dave Concepcion, the shortstop of the world champion Cincinnati Reds, signed his 1976 contract for a reported

$87,000. But Concepcion's club's all-star shortstop, not yet two years old, had sought "a two-year contract that would get the salary for the second year of the contract."

Bernard King, the second rebounding star of the U.S. States Olympic squad, said he had given up the idea of applying for hardship status in an effort to professional basketball.

"The Olympic team's big goal," King said, "is to get all my money and hours in so that I can be free to go to college." Both King and a mate, Ernie Grunfeld, among those invited to squad for the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

Mrs. Reid What's This? Platform Tennis Comes to Forest Hills Victor on 6-Game Run

By CHARLES FRIEDMAN What's going on at Forest Hills? Don't ask. In the stadium, where for more than 50 years the world has battled for the United States championship, a different game is being played.

Two platform-tennis courts have been set up smack in the middle of the "Tribune world championship" Friday and Saturday. Sixteen of the top-ranking doubles teams in the country will play for $12,000 in prize money, winding up the first tour in the sport's 45 years.

Platform tennis, a smaller version of regular tennis, has been confined to the suburbs until recently. Now it's said to be spreading all over the country in "cities as well."

The round of 16 and the quarterfinals start at 10 A.M. on Friday, with admission $1. The semifinals are at 10 on Saturday, followed by a pro-celebrity event and then the final; admission is $6.

If some tennis fans are nettled by the invasion of their hallowed stadium, they should know that many tennis players have taken up the platform game and will be in the tournament—Herb FitzGibbon, John Mangan, Keith Jennings, Chum Steele and Hank Irvine. Further, the tournament co-chairmen are Billy Talbert and Gene Scott, who were once in the world class of tennis.

that what's Billy promised today, the Yankee manager will end his spring six games and 61 catching tomorrow.

However, there are good reasons to believe the finger is broken, and Munson himself appeared to confirm that in a conversation with a player on another club. Broken fingers take longer to heal than jammed fingers. A finger broken on March 25 doesn't figure to be ready by April 8, which is opening day.

Dempsey, who never had such a busy spring in the majors, rapped three singles today and drove in the Yankees' third run. Lou Piniella also collected three hits and his ninth-inning homer gave the Yankees a 4-2 lead.

That's why Dempsey has been catching every lining of every game, to make sure he's ready by April 8. Why won't the Yankees admit that Munson has a broken finger? Because they're trying to find a catcher elsewhere, and if the other clubs know the finger is broken, they'll hold up the Yankees for greater value in return for a catcher. They would know the Yankees were desperate for catching

However, with two out and one on in the Mets' half of the ninth, Dave Kingman belted a homer off Dick Tidrow and the game went into the 10th. With one out, Fred Stanley hit a sinking line drive that eluded a lunging Kingman in right field and rolled for a triple. Joe Frazier, the rookie manager who has yet to see his team win, started making moves that, he Tom Seaver was pleased about something before yesterday's exhibition game with Yanks in St. Petersburg.

Seaver Alters Demands, Raising Hope for Accord

By JOSEPH DURSO
Special to The New York Times
ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 30—Tom Seaver revised his salary demands today as his struggle with the New York Mets continued. Both sides expressed hope that the struggle would result in a contract and not a trade.

Meanwhile, we'll keep talking. With the offer we made, he'd become the highest priced pitcher in baseball." Seaver replied: "I'm not the highest priced pitcher in baseball. Catfish Hunter is making more than me. And being realistic, I couldn't match him, whatever agreement we reach."

League. He was making $170,000 a year and wanted $325,000 in a series of raises over three years. The Mets offered him a raise, they were silent for two months, then raised the ante yesterday during a 15-minute chat in Tampa while encouraging reports that they might trade him to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I came down," the 31-year-old pitcher said after a 30-minute meeting with General Manager Joe McDonald. "Actually, I haven't changed the amount I want, but I've structured it differently. Joe didn't fall off the chair or pass out, and I imagine the club will get back to me shortly."

The dispute over Seaver's salary broke out four weeks ago while the spring training camps were kept shut by the owners of the 24 teams. They were then locked in a larger struggle with all 600 players in the majors over the legal upheaval facing baseball: How long could teams "reserve" a player's services past his contract? Two Federal courts ruled that the answer was one year. Meanwhile, many players, including Seaver, declined to sign their 1976 contracts.

After meeting McDonald again this morning at Huggins-Stengel Field, the team's main base here, Seaver pitched five innings against the Yankees at Campbell Park, where they play their exhibition games. He gave up three runs, two of them earned. Then he drove three miles back to the locker room at Huggins-Stengel and reflected on the possibility that he was a "test case" for all potential free agents. "I've considered that possibility, and I suppose it's part of the problem," he said. "I know that today I was exhausted when I pitched."

Ferrigno is 'a real super athlete,' said the coach, but not Jets' material

By GERALD ESKENAZI
Special to The New York Times
PETERSBURG, Fla., March 30—The Jets are molding a fearful power- even Mr. Universe thinks a today.

Ferrigno is not boastful, and he spoke slowly and softly about why he thought he could make it. "I beat guys like Lynn Swann in rowing and bowling and baseball, and that made me think I'm a better athlete than the football player is."

He is a 24-year-old from Ocean Parkway in Brooklyn, and he works as a sheet metal cutter. So he trotted onto the practice field at the Jets' complex at Hofstra University, wearing only a T-shirt and shorts. (National Football League rules forbid equipment before training camp.) "Let's try him in the 40," said Bob Fry, the club's offensive coordinator. Jim Champion, the defensive line coach.

Smith Any Resemblance Is Coincidental

L. March 30—Michael Dokes climbed into the ring a hooded robe of devil's red that came down to his high white shoes. He danced backward, firing, danced forward into the corner and posed, the night with his gloved hands out in front of him, like Porcia saying, "It droppeth like the dew from heaven." He didn't look like Porcia, and he has been called an amateur counterpart of Ali. He didn't look like Ali, either. He looked like Manthos under a thundercloud.

Clark attacked from the outset and Dokes circled away, feinting, jabbing, doing his approximation of the All shuffle, throwing light, fast counterpunches with fair accuracy. Clark got over a solid hook to the head. The second time Dokes was warned for holding, he gave the referee an indulgent grin. A head-on collision opened a small cut over Clark's right eye. In the second round Clark was still the aggressor, but no visible damage was done. When the referee broke a clinch to warn Dokes again for holding, Clark hit on the break. Dokes sneezed. Through the third and last round, Dokes stuck and moved successfully.

Not Criminal Libel
experienced and able kids showed up in the regions. Clint Jackson, for example, the 21-year-old Knoxville, Tenn., who won at 139 pounds, has the A.U. and two national Golden Gloves titles at that weight, and although the 125-pound champion is only 17, he has had 124 bouts, winning 100. Though the crowd was waiting for more Cuba's big Olympic champion, Teofilo Stevenson, more trouble in the Pan-American Games October than Duane Bobick had done in Munich's earlier.

The loser had changed to street clothes and was on his way out. He said he would win the A.A.U. title and get another shot at Dokes this side of Montreal. The winner was still down at ringside talking into microphones, peering out at cameras from under his Satanic hood. He said he was 18 years old and, after a moment's pause for addition, he cited his record at 105 victories, 7 defeats.

N.F.L. Veterans Drafted

J. K. McKay was taken by his father, John McKay, coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, and Mike Curtis, Baltimore Colts' linebacker, was picked by the Seattle Seahawks yesterday as the National Football League's two expansion teams selected 39 players each from the 26 other teams.

The Buccaneers drafted, among others, Larry Ball, Detroit Meehan; Anthony Davis, another Southern Cal star, was officially the property of the New York Jets. Both, however, had played in the World Football League. Among the notable new Seahawks was Curtis, middle linebacker for the Colts since 1969, a four-time selection to the Pro Bowl and Baltimore's most valuable player in 1974. Curtis also was one of the picket lines and practiced during the preseason strike two years ago by the N.F.L. Players Association.

Streaking Suns Score 113-97 Triumph

By SAM GOLDAPER
At 9:35 last night by the Madison Square Garden clock, a Knick era ended. It was then that the final buzzer sounded and the Knicks were trounced by the Phoenix Suns, 113-97, officially eliminating them from a National Basketball Association playoff berth for the first time since the 1965-66 season. Included in those nine playoff seasons were the only two championships the Knicks had won in their 30-year history.

Dynasty Is Looming at Indiana

By GORDON S. WHITE JR.
When John Wooden coached the University of California, Los Angeles, to its first two National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championships in 1964 and 1965, he had all the prestige needed to attract the best high school players. After the 1965 triumph, Wooden won the recruiting battle of the decade by getting Kareem Abdul-Jabbar (then Lew Alcindor). That added to the Wooden-U.C.L.A. attraction, as Alcindor led the Bruins to the first three of seven straight national titles—1967 through 1973.

Hoosiers the championship, which they won by beating Michigan, 86-68, Monday night. The odds are against Indiana's or any other school's equalling Wooden's U.C.L.A. record of 10 national titles in 12 years. Yet there are similarities in the beginning of the Wooden championship era and Knight's present position at Indiana—similarities viewed with foreboding by other college coaches. Wooden has retired, but Knight will be around for some time.

Second, the 1963-64 U.C.L.A. team was undefeated and the Indiana team completed a perfect season Monday night. Also, U.C.L.A. reached the N.C.A.A. tournament in 1962 and 1963, before Wooden won his first title. Knight previously took Indiana to the tournament in 1973 and 1975. Wooden is a quiet man who keeps most things to himself. Knight is often boisterous and explosive with friends and others. But each is a student of basketball, ever seeking ways to do something on the court better than the last time. Each is a strict disciplinarian, getting a near-military response

Serpico, at $29.60, First in Rich Pace

By AL HARVIN
Special to The New York Times

YONKERS, March 30—Beating the $73,000-added final of the Hopeful Pacing Series for 3-year-old colts and geldings at Yonkers Raceway tonight was a lot of fretting in Bret John's paddock, but not among the better. The bay colt went to the post a 3-to-5 choice among the 14,000 fans here. He had the advantage of drawing the inside post.

But Bret John, who had finished first or second in 11 of his 12 previous outings, came in seventh in the field of eight. The winner by a length was Serpico, with John Chapman in the sulky.

Serpico returned a whopping $29.60, $10.20 and $7.20 for a $2 across the board. Romeo's image, the second choice, finished second and Master Command was third.

The concern over Bret John centered on his driver, DJ Insko, on why the colt broke last week in the third race of the series and on his injury in that race.

"This is no knock against Insko, but the fact is this is only the seventh time he's driven him," said Mark Kornfeld, one of Bret John's owners, who is from the White-Barre Pa. area. Kornfeld was notified that Insko was not allowed to drive in New York.

"He [Insko] just doesn't know the horse that well, he said Chapman of his chalhoped, would bring him that elusive first victory. He relieved Ken Sanders with Craig Swan, who retired Otto Velez on a foul pop. Then, Mickey Rivers singled Stanley home with the tiebreaker run and stole second. Frazier ordered an intentional walk for Rich Coggins. However, Finelli responded with a double that drove in another run.

Frazier ran out of moves in the last of the 10th. The Mets had runners at first and second with one out, but Swan had to hit for himself because the Mets had run out of pitchers. Swan sacrificed the runners to second and third, but Bruce Boisclair grounded out, ending the Mets' 30th loss to the Yankees in 50 games.

The game was the third extra-inning contest for Dempsey. When asked afterward if he was punishing Dempsey for some bad deed by playing him in every inning in the torrid run, Martin said that he would use Rick Stearns and Deonny Lewis tomorrow against St. Louis. "Dempsey's been hitting the ball so good," Martin explained. "I want to get him ready for the season. But Thurman was moving his finger pretty good today and I feel he'll be ready by opening day."

Munson has caught only four innings this spring and even if he should recover rapidly, he won't have much time, if any, to work in exhibition games.

He meant George Steinbrenner 3d, the free-spending owner of the Yankees, who signed Hunter last year for five seasons at a total of $3.75 million in salary, bonus, insurance policies, and lawyers' fees. The Yankees also are bidding for Andy Messersmith, the Dodger pitcher who sued for his freedom and won.

"I still want three years," Seaver said, "but I've altered the numbers. Their offer and mine. You have to value yourself against the other pitchers in the game. But I feel better after this morning's talk because I told them what I think I'm worth."

New N.F.L. Clubs Draft Veterans

Graft, Detroit's tight end, John McManis, and Baltimore's running back, Bill Olds. Seattle selected two quarterbacks, Graft and G Gary Keithley, a three-year pro with the New York Jets who did not play at all during the last two seasons. Keithley also has experience as a punter.

Evans was the last of the original 1966 expansion choices on the Dolphins. He had been a starter for them for 10 straight years at right tackle.

Graft started the first two games for New England in 1975 when Jim Plunkett was sidelined by a shoulder injury. He was ineffective, however, and Plunkett was rushed back into action. From then on, Graft appeared little, being relegated to the Patriots' No. 3 quarterback behind Plunkett and Steve Grogan.

McManis was selected third out of Clemson in the 1972 draft by Pittsburgh and was a starter in all but one game during his first two pro seasons. But injuries hampered him in 1974 and last year he was dealt to Detroit, where, as a backup to Charlie Sanders, he caught only six passes for 77 yards.

Olds was Lydell Mitchell's running mate in the Baltimore backfield that played such an instrumental part in lifting the Colts to a 10-4 won-lost record and into the playoffs. In 1975 he rushed for 281 yards and two touchdowns, and also caught 30 passes for 194 yards.

Davis had his greatest years under McKay at Southern Cal, winding up with 1,421 yards in 1974 when he was an all-American and runner-up to Archie Griffin of Ohio State in the Heisman Trophy balloting. The Jets selected him in the second round of the 1975 draft, but he decided to go to the W.F.L.'s Southern California Sun.

He was leading that league with 1,200 yards rushing when it folded midway through the 1975 season. The young McKay was drafted 16th by the Browns in 1975 but also went to the Sun. He caught 11 passes for

Judge Gives Instructions To Jury in Kapp Trial

By LEONARD KOPPELT
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, March 30—A key legal point apparently favorable to Joe Kapp emerged from the instructions given the jury today by Judge William T. Swaine at a two-day summary process begun in the former quarterback's antitrust suit against the National Football League. The case is expected to go to the jury tomorrow or Thursday.

Kapp was forced to leave the training camp of the New England Patriots in 1971 because he refused to sign a standard player contract, having played the 1970 season without one under a separate three-year $600,000 agreement. He refused because his lawyer, John Elliot Cook, insisted that the standard contract would commit Kapp to legal restraints, and that the other agreement was sufficient.

Kapp has never played football since, and eventually filed this suit against the Patriots and other N.F.L. teams. They contend that Kapp intended to quit football, and used his refusal to sign as a device to set up this antitrust suit, which could produce treble damages. Kapp insists he wanted to play all along, and would have returned to play at any time, if not compelled to sign the standard form.

Judge Swaine repeated today what he had ruled back in December 1974, that the draft and Rozelle rule violate the antitrust laws, and that the no-tampering, no-appearance-to-the-commissioner, and standard-contract rules were also violations to the extent that they were used to enforce the draft and the Rozelle rule.

The Rozelle rule requires a club to sign a free agent to pay compensation, in players' draft choices or money, to the team the free agent left.

However, as Judge Swaine emphasized to the jury, the mere existence of an illegal arrangement, which the N.F.L. has, is not enough to entitle an individual to collect damages. Kapp has to show, he said, that the particular antitrust violations were the cause of whatever damage he suffered.

The N.F.L. has argued that about that. A real super athlete. It's just too bad. "I've been working out for three hours a day since I was 7 years old," said Ferrigno. "I started to develop my body to get to get some respect. The other kids used to make fun of me because I was hard of hearing."

Ferrigno became an excellent lip-reader. He also hears quite well with a hearing aid. He has grown to be 6 feet 5 inches tall and weighs 258 pounds. He has a 33-inch waist, a 58-inch chest and thighs that measure about 30 inches around. But he flexed his muscles today before a virtually empty field. The only spectators were the coaches, the assistant trainer and the equipment manager. He was observed, too, by Joe Wysock, who is also a body-builder. Wysock is a 6-4, 250-pounder who sat out last year in what would have been his rookie Jet season, following knee surgery.

Wysock came over to say hello, since Ferrigno is the epitome of body building for all those so inclined. "You've been playing football long?" Ferrigno asked him. "Since I was 8 years old," said Wysock. "Eight years old?" said Ferrigno. "I missed a lot of years," Ferrigno admitted later as he prepared to leave. "But I still think I can do it. I never learned how to plant my feet. I can run faster than 5.1 seconds. I really can. If I only had time, I could do it."

Indiana Dynasty Looming

From players. Each stresses defense. Knight, like Wooden, is close to obtaining the pick of the crop in high school players and, like Wooden, recruits very selectively. Three of his certain coming freshmen this year are among the top 20 high school senior prospects.

The Hoosiers' coach has an advantage over the 1964 Wooden. Knight is only 35 years old. Wooden was 53 when U.C.L.A. won its first championship.

But Knight faces a disadvantage Wooden did not face 12 years ago. There are many more good teams and players now than in 1964. The Southeastern Conference, for instance, has developed in the last five years into one of the most powerful leagues. It used to be a one-team conference (Kentucky). And the S.E.C. champion plays each year with the Big Ten champion in the Midwest regional early rounds of the N.C.A.A. tournament. Indiana won the Big Ten title and fought through the Midwest regional this season.

The Midwest may be for some time a much stronger regional than the West has ever been. U.C.L.A. had weak opposition in the West regional before reaching the semifinals round each time it won a championship.

Indiana has finished one of the most impressive series of victories in N.C.A.A. tournament history by beating St. John's, Alabama, Marquette, U.C.L.A. and Michigan. The last four were ranked among the top 10 teams in the nation, and St. John's was in the top 20.

With difficult schedule in the Big Ten and within the Midwest regional, when they can make it, the Hoosiers may have to get more big, strong players like the ones who took the 38th annual N.C.A.A. title.

Kent Benson, at 6 feet 11 inches and 245 pounds, is the type Knight will want for center from now on. He won the N.C.A.A. tournament's most-valuable-player award. Quinn Buckner and Bobby Wilkerson are exceptionally strong guards. Wilkerson is unusual for that spot at 6-7 and Buckner is a former Indiana football safety.

Scott May is a coach's dream—a strong, quick forward who can hit from anywhere while ganged by two or three defenders.

U.C.L.A.'s Wooden dynasty is over. Gene Bartow, who coached the Bruins to third place in the N.C.A.A. tournament, may yet reach the top. But most persons favor Indiana to be a bigger threat than U.C.L.A. in the next year or two, even though the Hoosiers lose four starting seniors while the Bruins have four starters returning. Benson, a junior, will be back.

Wilkerson Recovered
Special to The New York Times
PHILADELPHIA, March 30—Bobby Wilkerson, the Indiana guard who was knocked unconscious during the National Collegiate championship game last night, remained under observation at Temple University Hospital today. Dr. Joseph Torg of Temple said he expected him to be released tomorrow.

He said that Wilkerson had suffered a "severe concussion" when struck on the left side of his face by Wayne Britt's elbow early in the game. He was removed to the hospital "when he showed signs of illness after he regained consciousness," the doctor said.

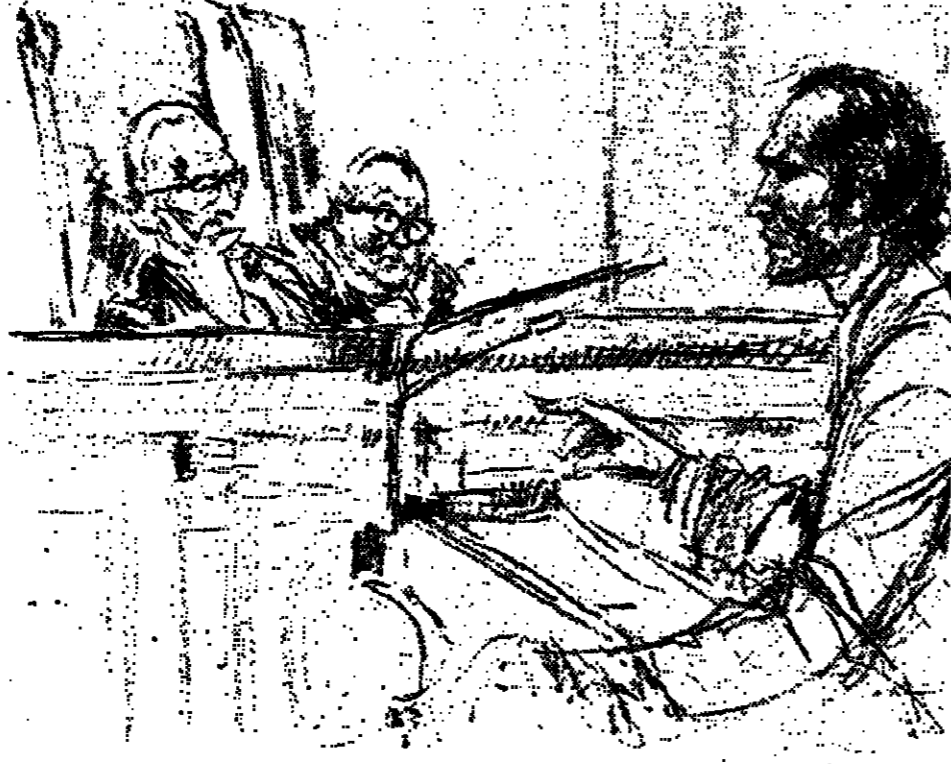

Wilkerson was placed under intensive care overnight as a precaution, but was up and about today.

Wild Homecoming
March 30 (UPI)—Coach Bobby Knight went off recruiting today as his National Collegiate basketball champions returned home to a tumultuous welcome.

Thousands of students celebrated as the team arrived in Indianapolis with a police escort. The revelry began on campus last night when the championship game ended in Philadelphia with Indiana scoring an 86-68 victory over its Big Ten rival, Michigan, and finishing the season undefeated.

Knight and the players parted company, with the coach remaining on the East Coast to do some recruiting for next season, and the players and other officials returning to Indiana.

Athletic Director Paul Dietzel headed the welcoming delegation at Weir Cook Airport in Indianapolis. About 3,000 fans were on hand as Gov. Otis R. Bowen read a proclamation. Bowen had to wait about 15 minutes, though, while the fans and reporters converged on the players. The Governor, accompanied by his wife, finally was able to proclaim "N.C.A.A. basketball week in Indiana."

Anthony G. Amsterdam arguing for the abolition of the death penalty before the Supreme Court yesterday. Listening are Justices Lewis F. Powell Jr. and John Paul Stevens.

Justices Hearing Views on Death Penalty

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 30—The Supreme Court began its re-examination of the death penalty today by listening to an emotional appeal for its abolition on behalf of hundreds of prisoners on Death Row.

Then it heard an even more emotional appeal, by the Attorney General of Texas, that the penalty be allowed as a deterrent against violent crimes.

"This Court is not a super-legislature," Attorney General John L. Hill said. "This Court is not the keeper of the social values, the conscience, the moral values of the people."

"Why shouldn't there be a deterrent?" he asked, almost shouting. "Of course it's excessive in its severity, but not in the constitutional sense."

Death Called 'Different'

The lawyer who argued for the inmates, Anthony G. Amsterdam, told the Justices that "death is different."

"If you don't accept the position that death is different," he said, "we lose the case."

Some of the questions of the Justices indicated that the challengers of capital punishment may face a more difficult task than did the challengers who succeeded in 1972 in having the high court strike down the death penalty laws then in effect.

In part, this greater difficulty may be inherent in the issues now before the Court. In 1972, the Court was faced with a broad range of death penalty laws allowing capital punishment for numerous offenses, often with no guidance for judge or jury. The Court ruled that the penalty as then applied was cruel and unusual, in violation of the Eighth Amendment—not because it was inherently cruel and unusual, but because of the random way it was applied.

The ruling was perceived by many as leaving loopholes—specifically, as possibly permitting the penalty if it were applied in a less random and more structured way. The Federal Government and 35 states enacted new penalties of various kinds designed to fit within the loopholes perceived by the Justices.

The Court is hearing challenges to five of those states—in Texas, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina and Florida—that are representative of the others. The question is whether the new laws meet the Court's standard of constitutionality.

Mr. Amsterdam—appearing on behalf of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc., which represents many of the inmates on Death Row under these new laws—argued today against the Louisiana and Texas statutes specifically and the others more generally.

He argued that even under the new laws there is so much discretion left to prosecutors, judges and juries that if the death penalty were to be applied it would still be unconstitutional under the standards set out in 1972.

He also argued that the penalty was inherently cruel and unusual.

Justice Potter Stewart—one of the four Justices now on the Court who voted against the death penalty in 1972—questioned the first theory.

"Doesn't your argument prove too much?" he asked. He added that discretion had been built into the American criminal justice system on prosecutions for all offenses.

Under Mr. Armstrong's argument, any sentence, "be it life imprisonment or five years, is as cruel and unusual," he said.

"No," Mr. Amsterdam responded loudly. "Our argument is essentially that death is different." If the Court does not accept that position, he said, "we lose the case."

He noted that the death penalty had always been treated differently from other penalties that defendants in capital cases are allowed more challenges during jury selection, for instance.

Stevens seeks information. Earlier, other Justices had questioned his theories. Some of the questioning was merely informational, asking the lawyer's views. This appeared true of John Paul Stevens, the only Justice now on the Court who did not participate in the 1972 case, and thus a possibly pivotal vote, since the others were split 4-to-4.

Other questioning, though, appeared to suggest disagreement with Mr. Amsterdam. For instance, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger asked in a tone of slight disbelief whether the lawyer meant that "there can be no statute by a state or the Congress" that could satisfy the 1972 ruling.

The Chief Justice dissented in 1972, so the implication of his question was not surprising. But, it pointed up the difficulty the challengers face.

The questioning of Mr. Hill, the Texas Attorney General, showed the difficulties facing the other side.

Again, some of it seemed to reflect views that Justices had already expressed. Thurgood Marshall, for example, who voted in the majority in 1972, interrupted Mr. Hill's discussion of the value of the penalty, saying "if you wouldn't have to worry about recidivism, would you?"

The cases now before the Court involve six men—three white, and three black—under death sentences as a result of murder convictions. Two are in North Carolina and one each in the other states whose statutes are before the court.

According to the NAACP fund, 468 persons are on Death Row across the country. United Press International announced today that according to a poll it took yesterday, 527 persons were on Death Row in 30 states.

Bridge: Hugh Kelsey's Latest Book Deals With Declarer Play

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

For almost a decade, Hugh Kelsey, a Scotsman, has been producing high-quality books on play and defense, designed to help a good player become an expert.

The latest in the series, "Bridge Logic," dealing with declarer play, is published in paperback by Hart at $2.95 for 192 pages. The writing, editing and production are full up to the standards of the book's predecessors, although the reader will note an example of obsolescent British orthography: a logical "premiss" rather than a premise.

The diagrammed deal is from a Kelsey chapter entitled "Retaining an Option." East opens pre-emptively with three clubs, and West raises to five clubs over South's spade overall. North is forced to guess, and ventures six spades in the hope that his partner has two first-round controls. From his angle, it is likely that South is void in clubs, and his judgment is vindicated.

Morton's Fork Coup

At first sight, this seems a straightforward example of the Morton's Fork coup. West is likely to have the ace of hearts, and South must try to guard against the possibility that he has the diamond king as well. If he plays the queen from dummy and ruffs East's ace, he can draw trumps and lead the heart nine. West is now on the fork: if he takes the ace, the declarer will have sufficient discards for his diamond losers; and if he ducks, South will win in dummy and throw the heart jack on the club winner.

But as Kelsey points out, there is a good deal more to it. If the club queen is played at the first trick, East can and should duck, knowing from the bidding that South is void. This forces the declarer to take a discard prematurely—however he discards the defense remains on top.

South should foresee this defense and improve on his own play by playing low from dummy at the first trick. He cannot then be forced to take his discard prematurely. After ruffing in his hand, he draws trumps with the jack and ten, and leads the heart nine.

West is now in the familiar dilemma. If he plays the ace, South will have enough tricks, so he does best to play the ten. The queen wins and a club honor is played to ruff out East's ace. South is forced to use a trump entry to dummy to take the heart discard on the winning club, and the position is this:

Court Limits Voting Rights Act In Changes to Assist Minorities

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—The Supreme Court today narrowed the applicability of the Federal Voting Rights Act of 1965 as a tool to protect the political power of racial minorities in redistricting cases.

In a 5-3 decision, the Court ruled that political subdivisions need not obtain Federal court or Justice Department approval if redrawn political district lines improve the lot of minority voters.

Previously, the act, which currently applies in seven states and parts of five others, required that any changes in voting procedure be approved.

The Court's decision overturned a ruling of a three-judge Federal court here that a redistricting plan for the New Orleans City Council, adopted after the 1970 census, required clearance under the act.

The redistricting plan called for black population majorities in two of five districts from which councilmen are elected and a majority of black voters in one of the districts. Two members were to be elected at large.

Under a previous redistricting plan adopted by the city council in 1961, no blacks were elected to council posts.

Two Criminal Decisions

WASHINGTON, March 30 (UPI)—The Supreme Court also acted in two criminal procedure cases, ruling 8 to 0 in one that a criminal defendant has a constitutional right to speak to his lawyer during overnight trial recesses.

In the other, it tightened Federal law requiring the prosecution to produce at trial earlier statements of witnesses so that the truth of their testimony may be tested by the defense.

JURORS ARE CHOSEN FOR SOLIAH'S TRIAL

SACRAMENTO, Calif., March 30 (UPI)—An eight-woman, four-man jury was seated today for the trial of Steven Soliah, a friend of Patricia Hearst, charged with participating in a fatal bank robbery linked to the self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army, a terrorist group.

Defense and prosecution attorneys took less than one hour to exercise their peremptory challenges and pick the panel from a pool that had taken 12 days to select. Three women and one man were selected as alternates.

After the selection, United States District Judge Philip C. Wilkins recessed the court for lunch. He ordered the jury brought back in the afternoon for instructions and said opening statements would start tomorrow.

Mr. Soliah is accused of participating in the April 21, 1975, robbery of a suburban Sacramento bank during which a woman customer was killed.

Prosecutor Plans to Fight Hearst-Harris Severance

By MARCIA CHAMBERS
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, March 30—The chief prosecutor in Patricia Hearst's second trial said today that he would oppose her move to separate her case from that of her co-defendants, William and Emily Harris, all indicted together for kidnapping, assault and robbery.

The prosecutor, Samuel Mayerson, said that on April 14, when Miss Hearst must return here to enter a plea on the state charges, he plans to argue for a joint trial for the three companions of the self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army. Miss Hearst's plea to the joint 11-count indictment will come two days after she is sentenced in San Francisco on her Federal bank robbery conviction.

Mr. Mayerson said in an interview that the state objected to severing Miss Hearst from the Harris—also who want a joint trial—because "the law provides for a joint trial for defendants charged with the same offense."

He disagreed with a contention by Miss Hearst's lawyers that her defense was now "inconsistent" with the Harris in court papers filed here. Miss Hearst's attorneys said, "There is testimony pending to exonerate Patricia Campbell Hearst, which she would be willing to give in a separate trial." The papers did not elaborate on what that meant.

Mr. Mayerson said that the state opposed two trials because of the expense and the inconvenience to witnesses. He said that regardless of the diverse interests now espoused by Miss Hearst, she and the Harris were together on the day the alleged crimes took place.

The prosecutor disclosed his position prior to a 90-minute hearing in which the Harris argued that the prospective jury pool, which is drawn from voter lists, was not representative of the county's population. They want to expand it to include persons not registered to vote, particularly blacks, the poor and the young. And they asked that the trial jurors be paid $30 rather than $5 a day for their services.

Edward Rucker, a deputy public defender and Mr. Harris's legal advisor, told the judge: "The poor and the minority groups are the very people we want on our jury. These are the people who often do not exercise the franchise to vote."

Superior Court Judge Mark Brandier, who will preside over the trial, seemed interested in Mr. Rucker's argument that "a person may not have a desire to serve on a jury," and it was after this argument was advanced that the judge decided to delay ruling on the motion until April 14.

Miss Hearst said at her bank robbery trial in San Francisco that she was kidnapped by the Harris and other members of the Symbionese Liberation Army and committed crimes because she feared them. The Harris have accused Miss Hearst of selling out to try to win her freedom.

The state indictment stems from a series of events over a 15-hour period on May 16 and 17, 1974, when Miss Hearst covered the Harris's escape from Mel's sporting goods store; in nearby Inglewood by sending a fusillade of bullets from her automatic machine gun into the street and the store.

In their escape the three persons kidnapped two others and commandeered several vehicles. One kidnapping victim, Thomas D. Mathews, then a high school senior, who testified at the Federal trial, said that Miss Hearst had told him that it felt good seeing her comrades run free from the sporting goods store.

The latest in the series, "Bridge Logic," dealing with declarer play, is published in paperback by Hart at $2.95 for 192 pages. The writing, editing and production are full up to the standards of the book's predecessors, although the reader will note an example of obsolescent British orthography: a logical "premiss" rather than a premise.

The diagrammed deal is from a Kelsey chapter entitled "Retaining an Option." East opens pre-emptively with three clubs, and West raises to five clubs over South's spade overall. North is forced to guess, and ventures six spades in the hope that his partner has two first-round controls. From his angle, it is likely that South is void in clubs, and his judgment is vindicated.

Morton's Fork Coup

At first sight, this seems a straightforward example of the Morton's Fork coup. West is likely to have the ace of hearts, and South must try to guard against the possibility that he has the diamond king as well. If he plays the queen from dummy and ruffs East's ace, he can draw trumps and lead the heart nine. West is now on the fork: if he takes the ace, the declarer will have sufficient discards for his diamond losers; and if he ducks, South will win in dummy and throw the heart jack on the club winner.

But as Kelsey points out, there is a good deal more to it. If the club queen is played at the first trick, East can and should duck, knowing from the bidding that South is void. This forces the declarer to take a discard prematurely—however he discards the defense remains on top.

South should foresee this defense and improve on his own play by playing low from dummy at the first trick. He cannot then be forced to take his discard prematurely. After ruffing in his hand, he draws trumps with the jack and ten, and leads the heart nine.

West is now in the familiar dilemma. If he plays the ace, South will have enough tricks, so he does best to play the ten. The queen wins and a club honor is played to ruff out East's ace. South is forced to use a trump entry to dummy to take the heart discard on the winning club, and the position is this:

OVERRIDE THAT VETO

A MESSAGE TO THE STATE LEGISLATURE FROM THE COUNCIL OF SUPERVISORS AND ADMINISTRATORS

Peter S. O'Brien, President

The death of our schools is the death of our city. Permit our schools to be crushed and you will destroy the fabric of our society. You will destroy the basic unit of our society, the family. Families will flee New York.

These were the words we used not long ago when we urged Governor Carey to sign the Stavisky-Goodman bill.

Governor Carey, we pleaded, as a parent you know what every parent wants: the best for our children, and, at the very least, hope—hope for our children. If you don't sign the Stavisky-Goodman bill, you will destroy that hope.

The Governor turned a deaf ear to our appeal. He vetoed the bill, and that hope is destroyed—or all but destroyed, unless... unless the State Legislature overrides the Governor's veto.

We say: OVERRIDE. Restore the hope that is the essence of our schools.

OVERRIDE. Provide equitable treatment of education in the city budget.

OVERRIDE. Insure the minds of our children against ruthless fiscal slashes.

You assemblymen: You passed the bill, 126 to 10... And you senators: You passed the bill 37 to 15. If it was right then, it's right now. Stand fast by your commitment to the children.

OVERRIDE!

Listen to the voice of the people. We are the people. You need us and we voted you into office. Now we need you.

Listen to the people. Follow the tradition of the great legislatures. Forget the bankers! Forget the moneylenders! Forget the Governor! Listen to the voice of the people.

All we are asking is equal treatment for education. Do not sacrifice the minds of our children on the altar of financial expediency.

Matter of Literary Politics

UNDER By Lydia Chukovskaya. Translated from the Russian by Peter St. West. Quadrangle, The New York Times Book Company, $6.95.

BY ANATOLE BROYARD
Lydia Chukovskaya's first novel, "Going Under," The New York Times Book Review wrote: "It promises to place with Ivan Denisovich as the most impressive examples of the Russian 'purge literature'..." The Literary Supplement said: "Real and superbly written. Of all the books that have come to our knowledge, 'Going Under' is the most of all."

Chukovskaya is described by the title of her new novel, "Going Under," last person to shelter Solzhenitsyn and he has repaid her with a letter, quoted on the dust jacket, that literary evaluation, either by accident or design. "Having harvested [the] harvest," Lydia Chukovskaya is afraid to express it out loud. "Going Under" was published in Germany in 1963, and may now be translated into English. "Chukovskaya's calm prose is heart with grief and outrage at the greater man-made calamities of the 20th century. A very important book."

I have read "Going Under." I disagree with Miss Greer. The ill, stodgy, amateurish and almost devoid of ideas. And while I have "The Deserter House," I am convinced that it cannot have good book. If it had been, some competence would have shown his one. What we have here is a sample of literary politics: the of a novel for its "message," its "courage," as if these were criteria.

Ignorant of Advances

The advent of Jack Kerouac, literature has been generally ignored. Novels by blacks, novels by women, novels by counter-culture authors, "disadvantaged" minority have been ignored, regardless of their quality by the "concerned citizens" critics. If you are a freedom fighter, you can hardly be troubled with something so raft. I am not so sure about our homelands, there do seem to be circumstances for Russian Miss Chukovskaya, for example, if she has been brainwashed. Totally ignorant of the advances in literature has made — in fact, she she were trying to reconstruct of the novel out of the most and sentimental English models. At all she is allowed to read literature.

the topical references, "Going Under" gives the impression that it had an outside of time. The inadvertence of the author's style is more evidence of alienation than her political repression. Judging by heristic response to Miss Chukovskaya's work, however, it seems to be accepted practice that on the black market of Soviet sensibility one must be grateful for small favors.

In her righteous sincerity, the author quotes with contempt the political double-talk of Soviet newspapers—yet her own prose is just as bad, crusted with clichés even staler than theirs. She writes of the "apples of her cheeks," of "plunging the depths fearlessly" of "gnawing questions," of "thorns" in her heart, her brain, and her "gorge." Her heroine's heart grows heavy, her efforts to look on the bright side are "fruitless" or "to no avail." On every other page there is a reference to the snow "crunching gaily" under her feet when she is happy, or resembling dirty cotton wool when she is sad. In fact, this recurring weather report is the only "technical" trick in the author's repertory.

"Going Under" is about a group of Soviet writers who are taking a rest cure in the Russian-controlled sector of Finland. To all appearances, the rest cure seems to be a luxurious free vacation conferred by a grateful government, yet a Jewish poet is snatched away by the police in the night, and everyone else at the place seems to live in fear of his life. It is difficult to make out how these writers qualify for this sort of V.I.P. treatment if they are not more securely established.

A Pathetic Fallacy

The heroine, Nina, is a translator who is secretly working on a piece of protest literature. She refers to her "real" writing as "making a descent" or "going under." At first, she is content with her descents and communing with nature in a pathetic fallacy of a birch grove where a fir tree is a "happy prisoner" and the birches are "like little girls decked out in their finery... dancing round the Christmas tree." Then, alas, the cynical discussion around the dinner table thrusts a thorn into her heart, brain and gorge and her troubled spirit seeks solace in the company of Nikolai Aleksandrovich Bilbin. She has not enjoyed the company of her fellow man since her husband disappeared in a purge. Alas, again, Bilbin's work turns out to be a dishonest propitiation of the forces that be. He is a despicable coward who prefers spiritual to physical death.

In "Going Under" there is an infant who dies in its mother's arms as she stands in line to try to obtain news of her husband, who has been arrested. There is a little girl, dressed in Dickensian rags, to whom Nina reads fairy tales. Hardly more mature are the discussions in the rest home, in which "cosmopolitan taints" of any kind are abhorred. And yet, Nina appears, like the author, to have had access to Pushkin, to Pasternak, to Herzen and other great Russian authors. She unflinchingly quotes their most undistinguished lines.

"Going Under" suggests that the stifling influence of Soviet "official" culture outweighs older authors like Pushkin. It suggests, too, that a country's literature needs the stimulation not only of freedom, but of other nations' art as well. Of course, there is another possible explanation: that Lydia Chukovskaya is simply one more bad writer with good intentions.

The Right of Privacy

The decision of the United States Supreme Court that in effect upheld the constitutionality of an ancient Virginia statute on private sexual practices was retrogressive enough; but it was made worse by the way in which the Court chose to reach that conclusion. Without hearing oral argument, without writing an opinion, the Court summarily affirmed the findings of a lower Federal court—which was of course its legal right to do, but not its social obligation.

Given the importance of the question of personal privacy in the context of the period in which we live, the Supreme Court would have been more courageous and in fact socially—if not legally—more responsible had it done what three of the nine justices wanted it to do: refrain from passing on the case until the entire bench had heard argument on this important constitutional issue that simply will not go away.

There was a time not so far distant when the United States Supreme Court was the staunch and ultimate defender of civil rights and liberties; there was a time when the Court alone, of the three great branches at the apex of power in Washington, systematically served as protector of the individual citizen against undue intrusion of government into private and personal affairs.

But, as we noted in these columns only two days ago, the Court seems clearly to be beating a retreat from its once proud forward position in this delicate and difficult area of the relationship between citizen and state. It may indeed be reflecting a gradual lessening of concern for such matters on the part of the American public. If so, that is bad news for the country and for the future.

The Virginia case itself rested on a statute nearly 200 years old prohibiting a variety of unconventional sexual acts, including some kinds of heterosexual activity. The issue in dispute, however, affected only homosexual relations between consenting adults in private.

The constitutional right to privacy had been steadily extended by the Supreme Court, until quite recently, under protection of what former Justice William O. Douglas called "the penumbra of the Bill of Rights." It is this doctrine that the present Court has so sharply restricted, disregarding the sage comment of a dissenting judge of the court below: "Every individual has a right to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into one's decisions on private matters of intimate concern."

The Turkish Agreement

The Ford Administration's agreement to provide a billion dollars in aid to Turkey in return for restoration of American access to military bases in that country is in serious trouble on Capitol Hill and elsewhere, even before the enabling legislation has been written.

Secretary Kissinger has been warned that the aid proposal faces rough handling in Congress unless there is progress toward a settlement in Cyprus—a development that would require major Turkish concessions. For his part, Mr. Kissinger predicts dire effects for the United States and the security of the eastern Mediterranean if Congress rejects the Turkish agreement. He warns that any attempt to require Turkish concessions on Cyprus in return for the aid will have "disastrous consequences that would last for decades"—a warning that was echoed yesterday by Turkish Foreign Minister Caglayangil.

There is no doubt that permanent loss of the facilities in Turkey—including those for monitoring events in the Soviet Union—would deal a heavy blow to NATO defenses on an already weakened southern flank. And it might be counterproductive if the aid bill mandated a link with progress toward a Cyprus solution.

But given increasing skepticism in Congress and the country about long-term foreign commitments and large-scale arms aid, it would be difficult to persuade Senate and House to authorize a four-year program for Turkey, as the pact calls for, even if there were no Cyprus complication. If there is no progress on Cyprus, Congress might quickly return to the mood that led it to slap on Turkey the arms embargo it lifted reluctantly last year.

If the new pact encourages generous concessions from the Turkish side in a Cyprus negotiation scheduled to resume early next month, the prospects for Congressional approval will be greatly enhanced. In the absence of any Turkish concessions, the new agreement may prove to have been stillborn.

A Matching System

When Congress set to work to deal with the consequences of the Supreme Court's complex decision on the constitutionality of the Federal Election Campaign Act, it decided to reconsider most of the major issues. President Ford insisted, however, that Congress confine itself to the narrow question of reconstituting the Federal Election Commission.

The legislative bargaining has thus far produced a Senate-passed bill that in some ways is a better measure than the 1974 law. For example, it includes new language requiring corporations and unions to disclose how much of their own money they spend trying to influence stockholders and union members in political campaigns. It also contains a sensible bipartisan compromise on the much-disputed question of the extent to which corporations and unions may solicit political contributions.

The House of Representatives votes today upon its own version of the legislation. This version, although generally sound, has some objectionable secondary features. There is no good reason why Congress should limit the election commission's power to investigate the campaign activities of Congressional employees. The House bill strengthens the election commission's civil enforcement powers, but would set too high a financial threshold before criminal sanctions could be imposed.

By two provisions in the bill, the House would arrogate excessive power to itself. One section would permit either branch of Congress to terminate the election commission if it so voted early next year. Another section would, in effect, give the House an item veto over the language of any commission regulation, thereby giving the Democratic-controlled Congress too much power over the commission.

A major issue before the House today concerns the extension of public financing to all Federal elections.

When it decided that limits on political expenditures were unconstitutional, the Supreme Court seriously weakened Congress's effort to prevent the distorting effects of private money on the nation's politics.

The constitutional way to contain this corrupting flood of private money is to establish a matching system of public and private contributions for campaigns for the House and Senate, such as has already been introduced this year at the Presidential level. The Supreme Court ruled that in providing public money for campaigns, Congress could condition acceptance of such money on a candidate's agreeing to limit his outlays.

The House of Representatives has an opportunity to put this fundamental reform into effect with an amendment to provide that each contribution of up to $100 would be matched with public funds derived from the voluntary dollar checkoff on personal income tax returns.

When public financing of Congressional campaigns was voted upon two years ago, it twice won approval in the Senate but was defeated in the House, 228 to 187. The composition of the House has changed markedly since that vote was taken. Approximately 220 members from both parties are on record as sponsors of various public financing bills. If they make good on their pledges, the nation's political life can yet move out of the financial swamp in which it has been mired for too long.

Issues '76: Environment

Any candidate for the Presidency in 1976 will brush off at his political peril the issue of environmental protection. Too much has happened since the first Earth Day, close to six years ago, to permit the easy belief that Americans care about the air, water and land of this country only incidentally and after all their other problems have been solved.

The most striking of a series of similar findings by public opinion surveys is that six out of ten people are more concerned with improving the environment than they are with tax reduction or a curb on prices. They understand, as Presidential aspirants ought to, that without vigorous action now, the risks of pollution can only grow and in the end cost far more than the programs contemplated today.

The environmental record of the Ford Administration therefore presents other candidates—whether Democrat or Republican (except for the incumbent)—an opportunity to seize an initiative that would be both politically popular and of enormous benefit to the country. Consider that record:

• President Ford has twice vetoed legislation to regulate the surface mining of coal and to compel the reclamation of previously stripped and abandoned lands.

• He backed away entirely from national land-use planning, to which his predecessor had assigned the "highest priority" only to abandon it in his struggle to avoid impeachment.

• In the Ford Administration, the Department of the Interior has slowed down the protection of wildlife, particularly of endangered species. In contrast, it has hastened the oil exploitation of the Outer Continental Shelf without anything like an adequate study of environmental risks that have still to be weighed against the probable yield in energy.

The record of Congress, with swollen Democratic majorities, makes some of that party's Presidential candidates likewise vulnerable. On land-use planning Congress has retreated more than once before the fierce pressures of a determined lobby that was not above misrepresenting such legislation as the first step in a diabolical scheme for Federal zoning of private property. The Congress has been highly indulgent in stretching out the timetable for reducing harmful automobile emissions. It has scarcely begun to do what must be done to enable the mass transit systems of this country to reduce a volume of auto traffic that has gone far to destroy the cities of America and the air above them.

In the four years following the next Presidential inaugural, the environmental progress that has been made so far will either grind down, with grave consequences for the future, or it will regain a momentum that has faltered in the economic recession. It is up to the candidates to dramatize the environmental issue, to point out that a major program to improve the environment could also improve the nation's economy through application of resources to build and install the pollution controls, for which in many cases funds have already been voted and plans drawn up.

There are many other serious environmental issues that need emphasis in this campaign: the effort to screen and control toxic chemicals; resolution of alarming questions concerning the possible effect of aerosol and refrigerant gases—as well as of supersonic aviation—on the stratospheric ozone layer; the proper balance among various uses of the nation's forests, restoration of its parks, extension of its wilderness areas and, far from least, protection of its vital coastal areas from the depredations of industry on shore and the spillage of oil by tankers and freighters at sea.

All these objectives can and must be attained. Far from subordinating them to the state of the economy, candidates should view them as a major factor in improving that economy. The preservation of America's air, water and land is far more than a make-work program. It is the condition of life itself for future American generations. For a Presidential candidate's vision or lack of it, there can hardly be a better criterion.

Toward a Global 'Right to Food'

To the Editor:

In his recent column "Food for More than Thought," C. I. Sulzberger called malnutrition "the world's greatest imminent problem." He said that it was time for Americans to face it and for the Presidential aspirants to discuss it.

An instrument in Congress designed to help that happen is a right-to-food resolution introduced in the Senate (S. Con. Res. 66) by Senator Mark Hatfield and in the House (H. Con. Res. 393) by Representative Donald Fraser. It would affirm the right of every person to a nutritionally adequate diet and declare the sense of Congress to be that "this right become a fundamental point of reference in the formation of legislation and administrative decisions in areas such as trade, assistance, monetary reform, military spending and all other matters that bear on hunger." The resolution spells out some implications of this in terms of domestic and global hunger and aims primarily at self-help development and long-range systemic change.

Although it received little press coverage, a campaign in churches and synagogues throughout the nation has resulted in an estimated 200,000 letters reaching Capitol Hill since mid-November in support of this resolution, which will soon move to hearings before subcommittees in both houses. Some members of Congress have called this the largest show of support from voters back home for efforts to assist impoverished people abroad since immediately after World War II. If approved, the resolution would provide a foundation for a range of important laws and decisions that could help this country lead a serious international effort to eliminate hunger. That would be a worthy way of celebrating the nation's Bicentennial. Meanwhile, the resolution should provoke public discussion and be placed before the Presidential hopefuls.

To Protect Miners and Husband Energy

To the Editor:

The March 22 letter by Geoffrey A. Potter questioned the effectiveness of rescue devices available to miners who died in the recent coal mine disaster in Kentucky. His point is well taken.

Survival equipment available to the men was ineffective in saving their lives just as it was in the terrible Sunshine silver mine disaster at Kellogg, Idaho, on May 2, 1972. In that earlier case, 91 miners died of carbon monoxide poisoning as the "self-rescuers" proved to be inadequate.

Explosions in coal mines usually occur because methane gas seeping out of the coal is ignited by a spark. The Scotia Coal Company explosion in Kentucky was apparently of this nature.

All coal seams contain methane, which is the same as pipeline natural gas. The gas develops during the formation of coal over geological time. In general, the deeper the seam, the more gas is contained in the coal because the overburden pressure keeps the gas from escaping. Deep coal mines are therefore gassy, and this gas must be flushed out of the mine by an enormous ventilating system. Some coal mines in the Appalachian fields produce over twelve million cubic feet of methane per day during the mining of coal. The Bureau of Mines estimates that the methane content of coal averages about 200 cubic feet per ton of coal for a total of over 300 trillion cubic feet of gas in coal in the U.S. This is about equal to the nation's proved reserves of natural gas.

Demonstration projects have been under way for the last four years by the Bureau of Mines, in cooperation with coal companies, to drain the gas out of coal seams ahead of the mining of the coal. Holes are drilled into the coal and the coal is fractured. The gas flows to the surface and is then led directly into nearby natural gas pipelines.

With recent increases in the price of natural gas, it appears that cost of extraction of the gas from coal can be recovered from sale of the gas. By degassing the coal we can thus make the mines safer and at the same time supplement the nation's dwindling supply of natural gas. We should move more rapidly than we are to the systematic removal of methane from coal seams as a routine procedure prior to the opening of an underground mine.

Justice and Psychiatry

To the Editor:

Now that the verdict is in in the Patty Hearst case, we can all breathe easier that the defense of brainwashing was rejected by the jury. If it had been otherwise, incurable harm would have been inflicted on the American system of jurisprudence.

This was not a "Who done it?" trial but a trial which turned on the word "Why." In this, it more resembles the Leopold-Loeb trial rather than, say, the equally famous Lindbergh kidnap trial. However, in the Leopold-Loeb trial, Clarence Darrow did not try to make out a case of innocence based on the mental condition of the confessed murderers but only to lessen the severity of the sentence.

Following this model, psychiatric testimony might well have a part to play in aiding the judge in his task of sentencing a convicted defendant. It should have absolutely no role in the trial itself. Having three psychiatrists testify for the defense on the mental condition and/or brainwashing of the defendant and an equal number commenting for the prosecution on defendant's "mental health," whatever that may be, is not only demeaning to the medical profession but, if listened to, would remove the verdict from those who should be the triers of the facts, the jury, and subvert the essence of the system.

From this, one can easily imagine the defense of a rapist to turn on the testimony of a psychiatrist who would state that the defendant was brainwashed by his macho-environment; or a knife-wielder who would not be responsible for stabbing someone because a psychiatrist might state that he had been acculturated to carry and use a knife.

In short, in order to have a democratic society, individuals must be held individually accountable for their acts. We must bar the psychiatrists from the courtroom until after guilt or innocence has been established.

How to Raise Transit Pay

To the Editor:

The positions of the city and the transit workers certainly do not seem to lead to any sort of satisfactory solution. While inflation has eroded the wages of all workers, the city no longer has any rabbits to pull out of its hat. Past solutions have only resulted in the city being the highest-taxed community, forcing both business and residents to vote with their feet.

A suggestion to improve wages without cost to the city may help resolve the impasse: Since sick-leave benefits have been reported to be fully utilized by most workers, the value of this benefit should be added to the wage base, resulting in increased wages. Should the worker be absent, the city would dock his pay. Thus, the wage cost to the city would remain the same. I would venture to say that sick days used would decline precipitately.

The Would-Be Doc.

To the Editor:

I read with interest and some comment the March 28 letter of manpower by Steven Muller, of The Johns-Hopkins Univ. made use of the historic misstating my position on her power and then proceeded to with it.

There are thousands of you and women from low- and come American families who trained and fully qualified to physicians. It is an undisputed fact that for every American admission to medical school turned away. And they are tied. It is clear that one of factors in this highly competitive process is ability to pay nothing whatever to do vity, and is inherently unmanpower bill is designed come this inequity. If that intervention, I'm for it.

President Muller also comment I wish to "eliminate all fr choice for students." I have vocated such a position. I do redressing the current imbalance between super-specialists and care physicians. The March port by the highly respected of Medicine of the National of Sciences concerning the surgeons states: "The only way to avoid such an increase decrease the number of phisical specialties." I agree with stitute. My bill is designed ment their suggestion.

Mr. Muller asserts we face between quality medical education. Federally governed medical. Such a view is vastly overs. Through the health manpower, the American people erously supported medical for years. If the schools ex support to continue, they do a better job of meeting mate health manpower needs whom they call upon to pay t. In a time of severe econom the American people dem there be a reasonable relation tween their need for health m and the training programs o this nation's greatest resou medical schools.

WASHINGTON, March 30—President Ford's message to the Pentagon this week was one of those vague warnings from Congress that make more common sense.

WASHINGTON—The recent spate of Congressional leaks has raised serious questions whether leaking is criminal and whether leakers can be held in contempt of Congress.

An issue of considerable importance concerns the sanctions that may be applied against the normal recipients of leaks: members of the news media. Central here is the question whether a newsman's First Amendment free-press rights, as important as they are, are outweighed by the Government's constitutional rights to protect the integrity of its functions.

Without attempting to pass judgment on the culpability of anyone involved in recent leaks—specifically the leak of the House Intelligence Committee report to The Village Voice—several general observations can be made.

First, it is clear that in certain circumstances the Senate and House, without relying on the criminal process, can punish those who violate existing Congressional rules that specifically prohibit leaking.

The Senate and House have inherent power under the Constitution to penalize contempt of Congress—that is, an act that obstructs or impedes the performance of legislative duties. Offending Congressmen can be censured or expelled; guilty staff members can be dismissed from service.

Indeed, a house, without resort to the courts, can even imprison an individual whose conduct obstructs its functions. The Senate and House, with United States Supreme Court approval, have used this authority in the past, although not recently.

Plainly, unchecked leaking can obstruct legislative efforts. To illustrate, leaks can prod potential witnesses to obduracy or disappearance, allow subsequent witnesses improperly to conjure up devious explanations or excuses, result in the destruction of documents, or cause confidential sources to evaporate.

Generally speaking, Congress may take strong measures to protect itself against these unfortunate results. But Congress's right to discipline a newsman for participating in leaks would seem to depend on whether the need to prevent obstruction of its functions is significantly great to outweigh crucial First Amendment free-press rights.

Perhaps a more interesting issue is whether leaking violates existing criminal law. This subject, however, must be approached with extreme trepidation because two possibly applicable Federal statutes are broadly worded and subject to considerable abuse.

One statute makes it a felony "corruptly" to influence, obstruct or impede the "due and proper" exercise of Congress's power of inquiry. In an appropriate factual setting, a leak in direct contravention of Congressional rules might be considered a "corrupt" impediment to a Congressional inquiry. No case, however, has yet applied the statute in this way.

Another felony statute penalizes conspiracies "to defraud the United States." Despite its wording, the statute has been interpreted broadly to interdict conspiracies to impair, obstruct or defeat lawful Government functions.

In a 1910 case the Supreme Court upheld the validity of an indictment under this statute charging a conspiracy among an Agriculture Department statistician and two others to leak confidential information concerning the probable content of forthcoming cotton crop reports.

The Court ruled that the statute covered any conspiracy calculated "to deprive the United States of its right to distribute confidential information in a timely and impartial fashion.

In a similar case decided in 1970 the Second Circuit Court of Appeals sustained a conviction under the statute of an attorney who had conspired with a Securities and Exchange Commission branch chief to obtain confidential information.

These cases at least suggest that an agreement to leak secret materials between, for instance, a Congressman or staff member and an upcoming witness or newsman might constitute a crime under the statute. While money was the object of the conspiracies in these two cases, various judicial statements indicate that an intent to achieve financial reward is not a necessary element of the crime.

Some might argue that prosecution of newsmen for leaks would be impermissible under the First Amendment. This argument, however, must deal with a 1972 Supreme Court decision in which the Court stated that it would be "frivolous" to assert that First Amendment free-press rights conferred a license on a reporter or his source to violate valid criminal laws. A newsman, the Court said, may not steal or wiretap to get information, no matter how newsworthy the information might be.

This discussion is not intended to suggest that every leak is a crime or that newsmen or others should be prosecuted for leaking. In fact, the danger of abusive prosecution must be re-emphasized.

But these statutes do serve as warnings that leaking that disrupts a Congressional inquiry could be a very serious matter. Congressmen, staff members and the press should be made aware of these laws for their own protection.

The best remedy for Congressional leaks is for Congress to clean its own house. If Congress would enforce its own no-leaks rules and discipline guilty Congressmen and staff members, the incidents of leaking would surely decline.

James Hamilton, formerly assistant chief counsel to the Senate Watergate committee, is author of "The Power to Probe."

Abigail Adams And the Pill

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS—Today commemorates modern history's unfinished revolution. On March 31, 1776, Abigail Adams, wife of the second United States President, wrote to her husband, then a member of the Continental Congress: "In the new code of laws which I suppose it will be necessary for you to make I desire you would remember the ladies and be more generous and favorable to them than your ancestors."

The eventual "code of laws" drawn up in the Constitution plus subsequent amendments certainly allowed a fully "generous and favorable" position to women had successive governments been so inclined, but they weren't. The Constitution was interpreted for a man's world just as the theoretically equal position of blacks was interpreted for a white world. However, any judgment based on full equality was lacking.

I discussed this lacuna with Francoise Giroud, France's charming Secretary of State for Women's Affairs and one of five feminine ministers in the Government of President Giscard d'Estaing, a man who says "women are the wealth of France" and who insists that at least two should attend every Cabinet meeting because "men change when women are there."

Mme. Giroud, who is as lovely as she is wise, confides: "I have the impression that American women feel gyped and this is one reason for their vigorous reaction in women's lib. After all, they colonized and opened up your country, sharing all dangers and hardships with the men—and then this equality vanished."

"In terms of written law," she adds, "almost everything necessary has been done to establish equality of women in the U.S.A., France and Sweden. But many things remain in terms of application. In France women have held a strong position in family and private relationships."

"They were always important in the arts—for example, painting and writing. But the Code Napoleon [cornerstone of modern French law] was strongly biased against women and regarded them as the property of men. This heritage has not yet been erased."

The biggest boost to women's rights came from the contraceptive pill, according to Mme. Giroud. She explains: "Now women can say no to the idea of having children. For the first time women, not men, are in control of this entire phenomenon. The result is a profound psychological revolution among women, everywhere in the developed world.

"As recently as eighteen months ago many people snickered at the idea that women were demanding things. This is no longer the case. Women are becoming an increasingly important economic and political factor."

"Did you know that there is now a decline in birthrate in all industrial countries? This is caused only by the pill; it has nothing to do with whether more or less women are working. In France, for example, the percentage of women working is the same as a century ago. But then it was a question of field hands on farms and domestic servants. Now more and more women are in the top echelons of industry and the professions."

Organized labor here has lagged in urging recognition of equal working status for women. Mme. Giroud says this is partly because Joseph Proudhon, father of French trade unions, was a misogynist. But during the last two years the unions have recognized the need to climb aboard the women's bandwagon.

The Secretary acknowledges that a handful of women—like Indira Gandhi and Golda Meir—have attained top political positions and that in England, with Margaret Thatcher for the Tories and Shirley Williams and Barbara Castle for Labor, women have consolidated their authority.

Yet, she points out, it requires time to establish a position in politics. Most women start in that arduous field only after their children are grown. "Therefore," she says, "they usually enter public life later than men. The average age of candidates in U.S. Congressional elections is much higher for women than for men. For biological reasons women are likely always to have this particular handicap."

Mme. Giroud (who joins Simone Veil, Minister of Health, plus three other women secretaries of state in the French Government) says Canada and Sweden have positions somewhat similar to hers. Since President Giscard d'Estaing enlisted her, the Francophone African nations of Gabon and Ivory Coast have created comparable jobs.

However, the road to true political, economic and psychological equality—a status perhaps not even dreamed of by Abigail Adams—has still to reach its goal.

Kofi Awoonor's Fate

By Myron Schwartzman

Kofi Awoonor, a poet and novelist known throughout Africa and the world, remains under arrest today in his native Ghana. He had returned to teach at the University of Cape Coast for one year. Military police took him into custody at his home on Dec. 31.

Nearly three months later, Kofi Awoonor's whereabouts remain unknown; the charge against him has yet to be stated publicly; and efforts on the part of fellow writers, colleagues in the teaching profession, and friends to get in touch with him have proved futile.

After Louis Simpson, Pulitzer Prize-winning poet and former colleague of Professor Awoonor at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, met in Washington with the Ghanaian Ambassador to the United States, Samuel E. Quarm, the Ghanaian Government confirmed its arrest and detention of Mr. Awoonor.

Officials refused to elaborate or cite charges, and, according to an Associated Press dispatch from Ghana on Feb. 24, "they said no one was ever detained without cause."

Unofficial sources suggest that Mr. Awoonor's detention is related to a suspected coup against the regime of Col. I. K. Acheampong, Ghana's head of state, allegedly planned for last Nov. 19.

Kofi Awoonor was professor, doctoral advisor, and friend to me. He and I never discussed politics during the four years we knew one another. The reason is simple: He is not a political man.

My sharpest memory of Kofi is of the day we went to pick up his friend, the novelist Chinua Achebe, at Kennedy International Airport. There was a civil war raging in Nigeria, but as we waited for Achebe to arrive, Kofi and I discussed drums, music, poetry, literature, his home in Ghana—not politics. Kofi did not talk politics. His poetry is filled with images of suffering, sacrifice, love, mother, the Earth, the tribe's history, music and drums. His business is poetry and teaching, not politics.

I and many others around the world are left with questions: Why has the Ghanaian Government deprived Kofi Awoonor of the fundamental human and legal rights of any citizen in a society that professes respect for law? Why is he being detained? Ambassador Quarm's reported reference, when asked about the detention, to "questions of national security" does not constitute a formal charge. And the response of Government officials in Accra that "no one was ever detained without cause" is an absurdity.

If Kofi Awoonor is being detained with cause, what is the charge against him? Why has the "investigation" taken months? Where is he being held, and under what conditions? Why is he being held incommunicado? Ghanaian internal affairs notwithstanding, Mr. Awoonor has the right to hear the charge against him and to defend himself in open court. It is shameful to deprive a common criminal of these rights, much less a writer and teacher of international reputation.

Myron Schwartzman, assistant professor of English at Baruch College of the City University of New York and a member of The New School faculty, studied with Kofi Awoonor at the State University of New York, Stony Brook.

Plains, Ga., Carter Is a Hero and Butz a Villain

By ROY REED

PLAINS, Ga.—The mind of Plains is on men this spring, two villains and a hero. Here is a former Georgia Governor, Jimmy Carter, the Plains farmer and businessman who is running for President. The villain is Secretary of Agriculture Earl W. Butz and his associate Peter A. Peyser, a Republican Westchester County.

It is hard to say who is getting the most attention among the 700 residents of this farm community, the hometown Presidential candidate or the two men who are, as Plains see it, trying to "destroy" farming.

Butz is a vaguely, inexplicably comic figure. Even here at home, where it is his by the nickname "goober."

Powerful Allies

pite of that, the natives of these pine hills invariably say two things about him in dead earnest: First, it is one of the best sources of vegetable protein; second, southwest Georgia would be an ecological disaster area without it.

Butz and Peyser believe they are being treated with ruin by Mr. Butz and Mr. Peyser, which has powerful political support in Washington, is one of the last protected by Federal acreage allotments effectively supported by a Federal loan or guaranteed price. Improved varieties and farming practices have tripled the yield per acre since the beginning of the New Deal farm programs. Almost a third of the peanuts grown in the United States each year are surplus and end up as a drain on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Butz, an advocate of open marketing for farm products, wants to remove the Federal protection of the peanut as he and the Republican Administration have done on several other crops.

Mr. Peyser, a candidate for the Republican nomination for the Senate in New York, has introduced a bill to abolish the peanut program. He calls it a "classic subsidy shell game" that costs the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

In announcing his bill, Mr. Peyser assailed Mr. Carter, a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, as a recipient of this "wasteful" program.

Many Advocate Change

Mr. Carter apparently has enjoyed little direct benefit from the subsidy program. The Agriculture Department in Washington says its records show that the farm owned by him and other members of his family received only $2,729 in peanut subsidies between 1970 and 1975. But the Carters do raise seed peanuts that are sold to farmers whose crops are subsidized. And their warehouse stores crops produced under the subsidies.

Many of the nation's 65,000 peanut farmers believe that their program must be changed to reduce the huge surpluses. They are reluctant to take the lead in changing it, however, because it has provided them with the best incomes of their lives in recent years.

Billy Carter, Jimmy Carter's brother and one of his partners in a farming and warehousing business, said this week that most peanut growers recognized the need for changing the law.

"We're going to be sitting here some day without the whole thing if we don't do something," he said in the south Georgia drawl that his brother has made famous.

"Everybody that raises peanuts realizes it's gotten out of hand, that we've got to do something. But Peter Peyser's bill would destroy us."

Other farmers in this area agree. The peanut, they say, is the only crop that will grow well in the thin, sandy soil here. Crops like soybeans and corn, which grow beautifully in the Middle West, produce small yields here.

Butz Plan Scored

They say that without peanuts this already hardpressed area, where the towns have some of the highest unemployment rates in the South, would be in real economic trouble.

They say that Mr. Butz's open-market plan

Second Avenue Pizzeria Sigs Due for Smithsonian Display

WASHINGTON, March 30 —A new neon sign hangs outside Goldberg's Pizzeria in Second Avenue in Manhattan now. The old one has four places in history.

The sign is one of about 6,000 artifacts of Americana, including a number with New York area origins, that will make up an unusual Smithsonian Institution exhibit scheduled for a Bicentennial summer opening.

The exhibit, which was designed by Chermayeff and Geismar Associates, New York, will be the largest ever assembled by the Smithsonian.

The display is an effort by the institution to slice the American pie into its ethnic components and serve it up as its "Nation of Nations" exhibit, a phrase taken from Walt Whitman's "Leaves of Grass." By depicting how ethnic groups have lived, worked, played, produced and consumed together, the Smithsonian hopes to show how a common purpose has brought them together as one country.

A visit to the exhibit area shows some completed displays with brightly lit glass enclosures flanking a dark passway that twists through four major display areas. Laborers—some volunteers—work to finish others in time for the early June opening.

A curator said that another area, where there were only stray boards, would feature William (Bojangles) Robinson's shoes and Irving Berlin's piano and Mohammed Ali's boxing gloves.

The first section of the exhibit is devoted to the American Revolution and the period preceding it. It will contain the lap desk on which Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence and a looking glass from the Mayflower.

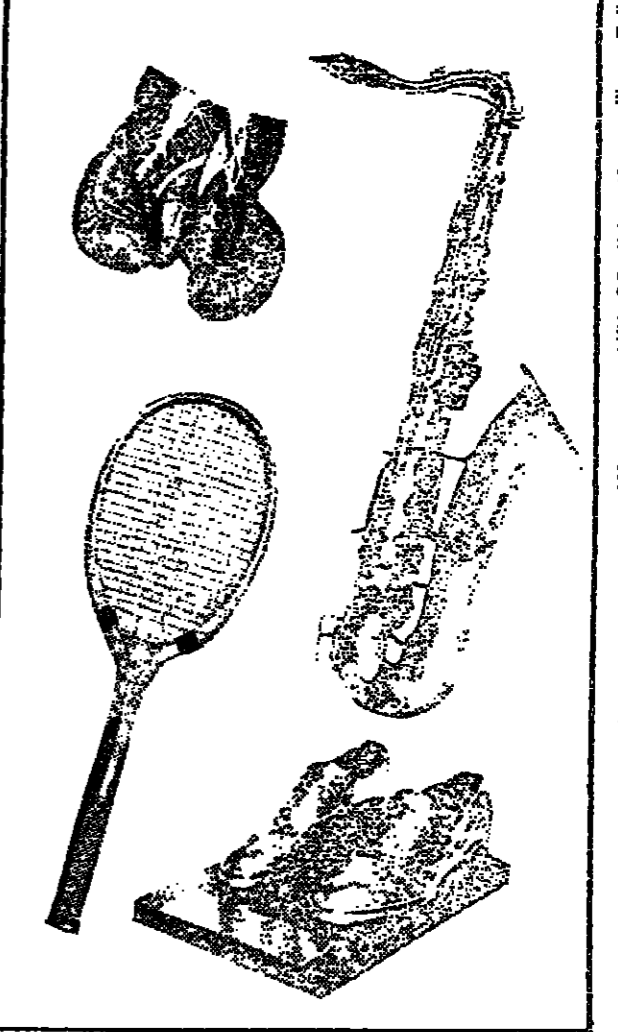

A complete colonial kitchen dating back to 1695 and a cutaway scale model of the Frisia, a vessel that in the late 1800's shuttled thousands of German immigrants to New York on 95 voyages, marks the start of an area for which Richard E. Ahlborn is responsible.

As one of several curators, Mr. Ahlborn's job has sent him around the country in search of artifacts. In New Jersey, he found two foot lockers brought over from Italy in the 1800's by a nun to St. Dominic's Convent in Newark.

In treating the ethnic diversity of the country, the Smithsonian has not ignored the existence of prejudice. Amid displays of gypsy artifacts and Protestant, Jewish and Roman Catholic religious objects is a reminder—two worn doorknobs marked "white" and "black," a cross and a hooded white robe.

"We'd be dishonest if we left out the negative aspects," Mr. Ahlborn said.

Another section, arranged

by Carl Schelle, who also heads the project as a whole, is devoted to shared experiences. Here is a ticket booth from Yankee Stadium, dating back to 1923, alongside a section of grandstand from the stadium, Babe Ruth's uniform and hat, George M. Cohan's shoes, Harry Truman's bowling pin and a Billie Jean King tennis dress—all reflecting different ethnic backgrounds and how they were brought together in sports and entertainment. Mass production and consumption are the theme of the exhibit's last section. Assembled by Otto Mayr and Peter Marzio are pistols, typewriters, sewing machines and automobiles. A pencil-making machine will be in operation.

Mr. Marzio decided that the best way to exhibit consumption would be to display neon signs from various ethnic restaurants. Three quarters of the signs came from New York because, Mr. Marzio said, the city is one of few with such diversity where enterprises retain many of the old world ways.

Syrian mediators raised pressure on recalcitrant Lebanese factions to agree to a week's truce in the civil war. But as Moslem forces continued to advance in downtown Beirut, Kamal Jumblat, the Lebanese Druse leader who is titular head of the Moslem-leftist alliance, again rejected the idea as being of advantage to the Christian rightists. [Page 1, Column 8.]

Western intelligence reports reaching Paris said Iraq had threatened to intervene militarily in Lebanon if Syria exerted heavy pressure on Moslem forces for a cease-fire. Kamal Jumblat reportedly received an assurance last week that Iraq would send in airborne troops to aid his Moslem-leftist ally in the Syrians became substantially involved in Lebanon. [1:7-8.]

In the northern half of Israel, a general strike of Arab citizens erupted into violent clashes with security forces in more than a dozen villages, leaving at least five Arabs dead. The Arabs were protesting a Government plan to appropriate Arab land as a part of a regional housing and development program in Galilee, an area which is predominantly Arab. [1:5-7.]

Denis Healey, Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, lost out in the contest to succeed Harold Wilson as Labor Party leader and Prime Minister, coming in last in the three-man race. Supporters of Foreign Secretary James Callaghan, who was first, were optimistic that most of the Healey backers would switch to him, providing a majority over Michael Foot, the Secretary for Employment, in the final balloting. [1:6.]

Justice Department sources said that Attorney General Edward H. Levi would soon order the Federal Bureau of Investigation to notify all citizens who had been targets of the 17-year Cointelpro program of harassment and disruption against various radical groups. Hundreds and even thousands may still be unaware that they were such targets. One official said that notification could subject the department to a barrage of civil lawsuits brought by those whose lives were damaged by Cointelpro. [1:1-2.]

Metropolitan

Productivity was the key stumbling block between the Transit Authority and the Transport Workers Union as they sought an agreement to prevent a bus and subway strike tomorrow morning. Mayor Beame's labor adviser, Theodore Kheel, called the situation extremely difficult, with no basis for agreement that would be satisfactory to both sides. Vincent D. McDonnell, one of the mediators, said the parties would negotiate around the clock to seek one. [1:5-6.]

An unanticipated shortfall in receipts from the newly imposed bank tax threatens to throw the state's budget out of balance by as much as $180 million next year. Peter C. Goldmark Jr., the Budget Director, said the budget would have to be closed by additional cuts and, with great reluctance, by postponing state income tax refunds. [1:5.]

2 Sculptors Seek To Withdraw Work From Whitney Show

Two well-known sculptors are seeking to withdraw their works from the Whitney Museum show "200 Years of American Sculpture," contending that the museum is presenting their art incorrectly.

One of the sculptors, Robert Morris, has filed suit against the museum, contending that not only is it exhibiting a work he had not submitted for the show, but that the work from its own collection that has been substituted, a hanging construction mad of felt, is torn.

The other sculptor, Carl Andre, withdrew the work he had submitted to the show on the ground that it was put near such distracting elements as a bay window and fire exit. He seeks to buy back for $25,000 a substitute copper floor piece of his that the Whitney is showing, also from its own collection. He said that the museum misinstalled it by putting rubber under the copper pieces.

The Whitney is adamant that the works will continue in the exhibition. "The museum owns the works and, although we are sympathetic to the artists' wishes to designate their deployment, we can't comply," says Thomas Armstrong 3d, the museum's director.

According to Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Morris' original metal to be suspended from the ceiling, but the Whitney's architects advised against this.

The controversy, according to Mr. Andre, again raises the question of whether an artist should retain a say over how his work is displayed once it is sold, a position never supported by the courts in this country. French "moral rights" law gives an artist such control over his work after title has passed.

CORRECTION

Because of an error in reference material, an article in The New York Times on Monday incorrectly identified John S. Bowles as president of Benton & Bowles and erroneously reported that he had attended a $250-a-person function for Jimmy Carter. The president of the firm is John S. Bowen, a Republican, and he did not attend. John Bowles, vice president of Kidder Peabody & Co. Inc., was present.

W. J. Usery Jr., the Secretary of Labor, has been here since Sunday night, trying to work out a settlement.

CHILDREN'S HOME DENIES CENSORING

Says TV Tape of Conditions Is a Violation of Privacy

Seeking to prevent WABC-TV from showing its account of conditions in children's home on Staten Island, a lawyer for the home argued at an Appellate Division hearing yesterday that freedom of the press was being used as a guise to invade the children's constitutional right to privacy.

Gerald E. Bodell, counsel for St. Michael's Home, contended that the seven-minute videotape, stigmatized the young adolescents as drug and alcohol abusers, rapists and victims of rape.

In a brief filed for the city's Department of Social Services as a friend of the court, W. Bernard Richland, Corporation Counsel, supported St. Michael's to the extent of holding that WABC-TV should be barred from showing the face of any child in the telecast.

The five-judge bench of the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court, with Justice Harold A. Stevens presiding, reserved decision and will review the videotape this morning.

RUBE BLOOM DIES; COMPOSER WAS 73

Wrote 'Give Me the Simple Life' and 'Fools Rush In'

By WILLIAM M. FREEMAN

Rube Bloom, the composer whose hits over nearly half a century included "Give Me the Simple Life," "Penthouse Serenade" and "Don't Worry 'Bout Me," died last evening at his home in the Consulate Hotel, 224 West 49th Street. He was 73 years old.

Mr. Bloom, a self-taught pianist, began his career with a flourish in December 1928, when the Victor Talking Machine Company gave him a prize of $5,000 for a jazz composition, "Song of the Bayou."

He wrote music for revues at the Cotton Club and was one of several composers contributing to the score of "Leslie's Blackbirds of 1938," a Negro musical at the Hudson Theater.

Mr. Bloom also wrote the score for a film, "Wake Up and Dream," and toured Army installations in Europe with a United Service Organizations group in the mid-1950's.

Among his collaborators were Johnny Mercer, Harry Ruby, Ted Koehler, Sammy Gallop, Harry Woods and Mitchell Parish.

His other songs and instrumental pieces included "Truckin'," "Out in the Cold Again," "Fools Rush In," "Big Man From the South," "Maybe You'll Be There" and "Stay on the Right Side, Sister."

Others were "Here's to My Lady," "I Can't Face the Music," "Good for Nothing Joe," "Suite of Moods," "Soliloquy," "Spring Fever," "Sapphire," "Serenata," "Silhouette," "On the Green," "Got No Time," "Love Is a Merry-Go-Round," "Savage in My Soul" and "I Wish I Could Tell You."

In a 1928 interview, Mr. Bloom predicted that a distinctive national school of music was being born in this country and asserted that the United States would some day be "the musical center of the world."

Julian A. Black Is Dead at 79; Former Manager of Joe Louis

CHICAGO, March 30 (AP) — Julian A. Black, co-manager of the former world heavyweight boxing champion Joe Louis, died yesterday at Northwestern Memorial Hospital of complications from a fall in his apartment. He was 79 years old.

The last member of a famous managerial team, he died five months after his partner, John Roxborough.

They were a contrasting pair, the quiet, well-dressed Mr. Black and the articulate, aggressive Mr. Roxborough. They stood out as the first black managers in the 1930's.

Mr. Black and his co-manager discovered Louis in 1932, when Joseph Louis Barrow, as he was known then, was working on a Detroit assembly line.

Mr. Black was widely known among Long Island yachtmen, chiefly for his participation in the Stamford Yacht Club's Labor Day weekend races.

He had earlier been harbor master at the American Yacht Club in Rye, N.Y., and the Shelter Island (N.Y.) Yacht Club.

Mr. Sullivan served in the Navy from 1927 to 1947, when he retired as a chief boatswain's mate. He saw action in the Philippines in World War II.

He leaves his wife, the former Mary Wilson; a brother, Edmund; a son, Daniel; and a sister, Mrs. Louis J. Scanlon.

He was the founder and chairman of the executive committee of the Fragrance Foundation, a nonprofit educational organization of perfume makers.

He is survived by his wife, the former Mary Dedin; a son, Donald; two brothers, Walter and Peter; a sister, Elizabeth; and four grandchildren.

paranoid fungus known as Claviceps purpurea, or ergot, one of the components of which is a hallucinogen related to lysergic acid diethylamide—LSD.

A prominent historian of the Salem trials, Dr. Stephen Nissenbaum of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, said in a telephone interview that the new theory was "interesting but probably difficult to prove."

In any case, Dr. Nissenbaum remarked, reinterpretations of the Salem witchcraft scars come every few generations and seem to mirror some popular attitude.

It was, he said, "one of those almost mythical events, which like all myths are subject to constant reinterpretation."

During the American Revolution, for instance, a Tory governor of Massachusetts took it upon himself to direct the Parris's Barbados slave, Tituba, in the concocting of a "witch cake" out of rye meal and the urine of the afflicted girls. This was considered a third "ritum test" for witchcraft.

U.S. Judge Thomas Madden Of New Jersey District Court

Federal Court Judge Thomas M. Madden died Monday at his home in Collingswood, N.J. He was 69 years old.

Judge Madden was appointed an assistant United States attorney in 1943 and two years later was named to the Federal bench. In 1961, he was named chief judge for the District of New Jersey. He retired from that post in 1969 but continued to serve as a senior judge.

A graduate of the Rutgers University Law School in 1930, Judge Madden was a trustee of the school.

He leaves his wife, four sons and two daughters.

School Superintendent Aids Removal of Books

Special to The New York Times

MINNEOLA, L.I., March 30—School Superintendent L. L. Croft, in a letter to the board of education, said he believed the removal of books from the school library should be left to the board of education, not the superintendent.

Mr. Croft, speaking at the public hearing on the removal of books from the school library, said he believed the board should review the books to be removed, not the superintendent.

CAHN TO DEFEND HIMSELF AT TRIAL

Former District Attorney of Nassau Says He Has No Funds for Legal Aid

By ROY R. SILVER
Special to The New York Times

MINNEOLA, L.I., March 30—William Cahn, the former Nassau County District Attorney, said today that he would defend himself at his Federal trial on mail-fraud charges and charges of filing false statements because he could no longer afford a lawyer.

Mr. Cahn, who had been represented by Irwin Klein of Manhattan in his first trial last month on seven counts of similar charges, said at his office here that "I am put in a position where I have no alternative but to represent myself."

The trial of the former 53-year-old Nassau prosecutor ended in a hung jury on Feb. 23 in Brooklyn Federal Court. However, a superseding indictment was handed up by a Federal grand jury on March 19, charging 46 counts of mail fraud and filing false statements for allegedly double-billing Nassau County and various law enforcement organizations for trips he took to attend meetings.

Mr. Cahn said his reason for dropping Mr. Klein as his defense lawyer in the second trial, scheduled to start in Federal District Court in Brooklyn on May 3, was "strictly economic."

"Most of my 25-year career as a prosecutor and District Attorney for 12 years was spent in the courtroom," Mr. Cahn said, "I fall back on that experience now, and hopefully, with as much objectiveness as possible, will be able to overcome the inherent difficulties of representing one's self and prove my innocence."

Mr. Cahn said that when he was defeated for re-election as District Attorney in 1974, his salary was $45,000, of which his take-home pay was $23,000 after taxes and withdrawals for a pension. He estimated that his average gross salary during the 12 years was District Attorney was $35,000 a year.

"I have three sons in college and there is the normal expense of running one's life," Mr. Cahn said, "there is very little left." He lives in Lido Beach in a house he bought eight years ago for $37,000.

Mr. Cahn said that he was well aware of the adage that "a lawyer who represents himself has a fool for a client," but that he had no other choice. His son, Neil, 25, will assist him in his defense.

While Mr. Cahn would not say how much he had paid Mr. Klein in legal fees, he did state:

"The legal fee itself was just the tip of the iceberg. The expense of preparation and trial was equally devastating. I am in debt and I cannot, under any circumstances, permit myself to get further in debt and jeopardize the future of my family."

Since Mr. Cahn left office on Dec. 31, 1974, he has been in private practice here in Mineola.

Mr. Klein said today that he withdrew from the case because "I feel it would have an economic imposition and hardship upon my family to go through the time which a retrial would take without receiving any compensation whatsoever for the new trial. Bill understood this and was agreeable."

At his previous trial, where 11 of the 12 jurors voted to convict him, Mr. Cahn had testified that when he was District Attorney he had paid $19,750 he received in double reimbursements to a highly confidential informant he knew only as "Sam Houston."

He said he had done so "with the belief that I was carrying out my sworn duty to protect the people of Nassau County and to fight crime."

Bus Terminal Expansion Is Pushed

By EDWARD C. BURKS

The $160 million expansion and modernization of the Port Authority Midtown Bus Terminal, intended to ease rush-hour crushes on the loading platforms, has gotten under way although bus traffic there has been declining steadily, if slowly, since 1968.

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey authorized the 40 percent increase in terminal capacity last year after it increased basic tolls by 50 percent at its six bridges and tunnels.

At the time, Dr. William J. Ronan, chairman of the Port Authority, said the station expansion would not have been possible without the increase in vehicular tolls at such facilities as the Holland and Lincoln Tunnels.

1979 Completion Date

When completed in May 1979, the enlarged terminal will extend along Eighth Avenue from 40th to 42d Street and then westward halfway down the block to the former McGraw-Hill Building. It will include such features as a two-story glass facade and a 15-foot-wide recessed area at the Eighth Avenue and 42d Street frontages to afford protection from the weather.

The enlarged terminal will initially provide 50 new bus loading positions—with the possibility of adding 25 more—to augment the 184 positions in the existing terminal.

Walter L. Giordano, the Port Authority's manager of planning for the new terminal, commenting on declining bus traffic said: "Despite what the annual bus traffic figures show, we still have a very crowded peak-hour problem. The Interstate Commerce Commission came in and looked at the problem last year."

He was referring to an investigation of massive peak-hour congestion ordered by the I.C.C. last April.

The I.C.C. named the Port Authority and 13 New Jersey bus lines as possible violators of Federal Regulations dealing with "safe and adequate service." In May, the authority announced the expansion plans.

According to Philip M. Bauso, project coordinator for the Port Authority, buses operating at seven-minute and eight-minute peak period headways create extremely crowded conditions, especially where they have to back out of diagonal platforms on the upper bus level.

The existing terminal extends from 40th to 41st Street and westward to Ninth Avenue. Essentially the expansion involves extending most of the existing levels northward across 41st Street as far as 42d Street.

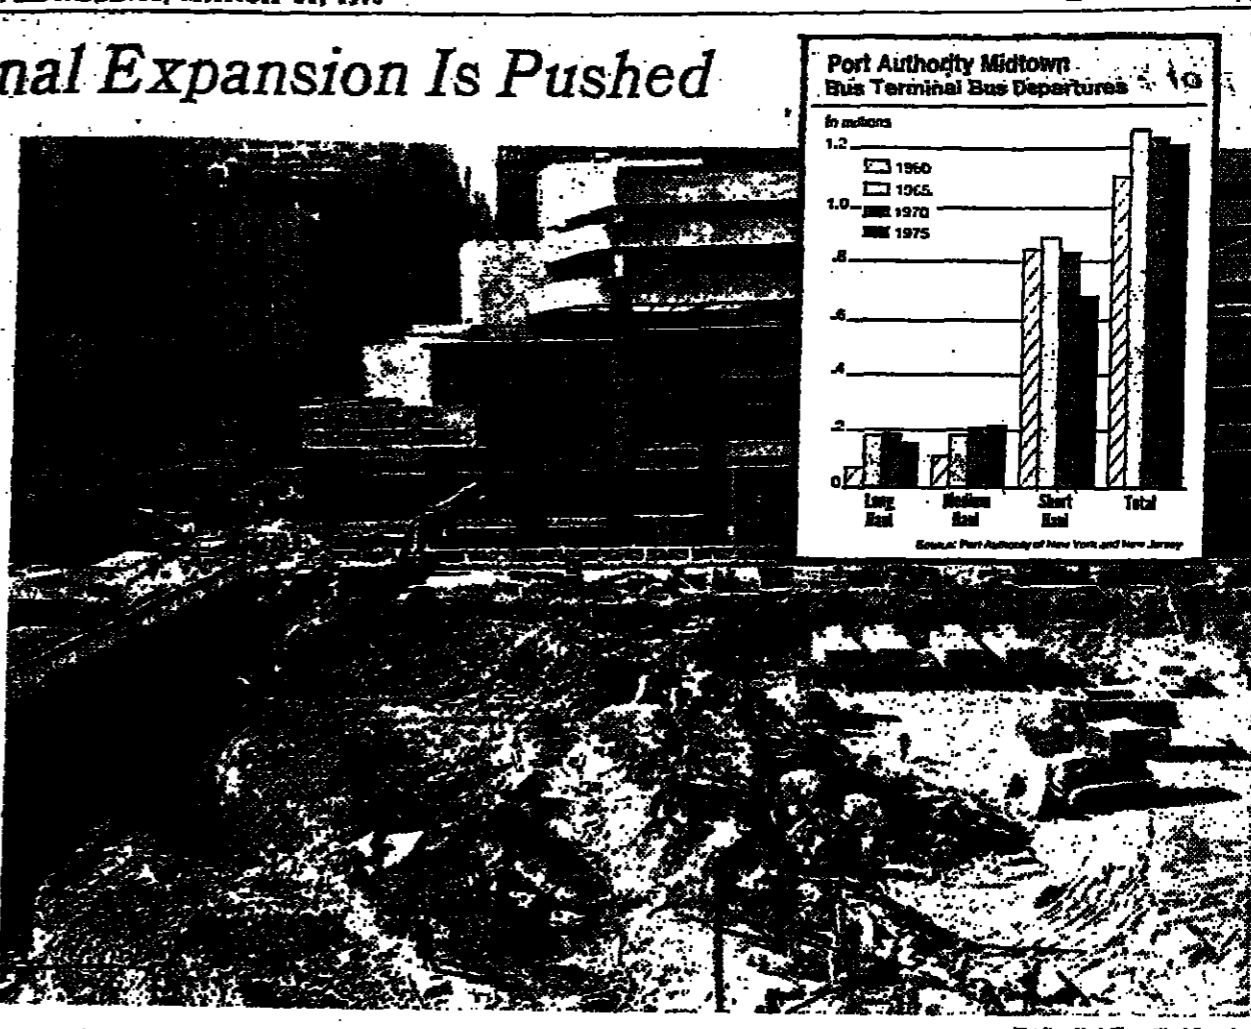

A Six-Level Annex

About 120,000 cubic yards of rock and dirt—the equivalent of 120,000 filled bathtubs—will have to be dug and blasted out to allow for a six-level annex, including two levels below ground. About 1,500 sticks of dynamite will be set off in six blasts each day to clear away massive layers of rock.

Already the excavators are down as far as 20 feet and have 16 to 18 feet to go. Forty-first Street was closed Monday to general traffic between Eighth and Ninth Avenues to permit construction work. A wide underpass for buses is to be constructed directly beneath the street to provide for an improved connection between the enlarged terminal and Lincoln Tunnel.

Figures released by the Port Authority show that bus departures at the terminal last year totaled 1,070,100, virtually the same as the 1,068,600 in 1968. It was 1,194,600 in 1970 and 1,261,900 in 1965.

The carriers pay the Port Authority on the basis of their total number of departures and also for such rented space as ticket offices and travel bureaus. Negotiations are still under way on contracts for the additional loading areas to be available in the expanded terminal.

The Port Authority estimates that the average load on departing buses is 30 persons (although rush-hour loads are at capacity, 55 and 60). On that basis, the number of riders departing both in 1960 and 1975 was about 32 million, with about the same number arriving.

There are generally 7,000 buses and 200,000 riders in and out of the terminal each weekday—the great majority of them New Jersey commuters. Since 1960, there have been some major changes in ridership habits, however.

Short-haul bus departures—generally those buses going to destinations within a 30-mile radius—dropped from 841,200 in 1960 to 694,600 last year. At the same time, middle-haul bus departures (those going as far as about 100 miles) doubled—from 103,500 in 1960 to 214,500 in 1975, and long-haul departures were up from 68,800 in 1960 to 161,000 last year.

The expanded bus terminal will provide two new main entrances, one at 42d Street and the other on Eighth Avenue, a new concourse connection to the Eighth Avenue subway; new motor-stair connections from the subway concourse either to the bus station's main concourse or directly to an upper loading level; much improved access by taxis to the terminal; a new, far easier baggage check-in counter for long-haul passengers on a level below the street, and new air-conditioned concourses and waiting areas for passengers immediately adjacent to the loading gates similar to those at air terminals.

There will be an upper level "holding area" for buses to allow "marshaling" them for more efficient rush-hour service, and major modernization of the existing terminal, including glass enclosures on 24 suburban "island platforms" with a total of 105 bus-loading positions to provide air-conditioned waiting areas.

In the main concourse.

To improve taxi access, there will be a new loading area on the north side of 41st Street directly underneath the expanded terminal. In addition, a new street for taxis and deliveries will be constructed between 41st and 42d Streets alongside the former McGraw-Hill Building and parallel to Eighth Avenue.

The new annex will have three bus levels—two upper levels and a third one below street level for long-haul carriers. The two upper levels will be extensions of similar bus levels in the existing terminal, but initially the uppermost level will be used to marshal and store buses.

Queens College Students Stage Protest

A 24-hour takeover of a Queens College building by more than 40 students ended after a member of the Board of Higher Education agreed to discuss their demands. The students, who were protesting budget cuts and a proposal to impose tuition, agreed to leave the Academic II Tower after Franklin Williams, the vice chairman, went to the Flushing campus to meet with them.

Sentencing of Hollander Is Put Off

The sentencing of Eugene Hollander, the nursing-home owner, for Medicaid fraud has been delayed to April 27 to allow time for him to undergo psychiatric and medical examinations. Mr. Hollander was to have been sentenced yesterday, but Justice Milton Mollen in State Supreme Court in Brooklyn granted the delay at the request of the state's Probation Department, which said it wanted to carry out the tests.

The request for the examinations was believed to be the result of letters by Robert J. McGuire, Mr. Hollander's lawyer, warning that his client might suffer a heart attack if he went to prison. Mr. Hollander has already had several heart attacks.

Lawyer Fined $1,500 for Defense Delay

A Federal court judge in Brooklyn fined John Sutter, a criminal lawyer, $1,500 for failing to be ready on Monday to defend Philip Rastelli, reputed head of the Joseph Bonanno crime organization, on extortion charges. Mr. Sutter had asked for a week's postponement to allow new counsel to prepare for the defense, because he, himself, was tied up in another trial, and the Second Circuit Court of Appeals had strongly recommended that the delay be granted. But Judge Thomas C. Platt said he was imposing a $500-a-day fine for three days because Mr. Sutter had disrupted the court calendar. The trial now is scheduled to start tomorrow.

2 LeGrand Kin Accused of Murder

A Kings County grand jury has handed up murder indictments against a son and a stepson of Deverson LeGrand, the self-proclaimed head of his own church at 222 Brooklyn Avenue, in Brooklyn. Aaron LeGrand, the son, and Stephen, a stepson, were accused of shooting Howard Pippins, 49 years old, and Jeffrey Miranda, 22, on Feb. 8, 1974, in front of 1500 Troy Avenue. The two victims were said to have served as procurers for Deverson LeGrand.

Helicopter Line Agents on Strike

Seventy-five agents for New York Airways went on strike yesterday, causing the company to halt its helicopter services. The line normally carries 1,000 people on 60 flights a day and from Kennedy, La Guardia and Newark Airports. The workers, members of Local 100 of the International Association of Machinists, had been working without a contract for a year. Negotiations for a new contract collapsed Monday night.

Michael Figueroa, aged 17, of 14-64 Beach Channel Drive, Far Rockaway, Queens, was arrested yesterday while hiding in weeds at Old Hook Creek in Lawrence, L. I. He had been chased here by Officer Michael Risolo of the Nassau police after he allegedly broke into a tavern at 636 Rockaway Turnpike, North Lawrence, and escaped with $444. He was charged with third degree burglary.

Rent Control Is Extended For 640,000 Apartments

By EDWARD RANZAL

The City Council voted yesterday to extend rent control covering 640,000 apartments until May 31, 1979.

The three-year extension, which was approved by a 38-to-2 vote, will continue the limitation on rent increases for those apartments to 7 1/2 percent a year.

Under state law, the Council had until today to extend rent control. Rents have been controlled in one form or another here since 1947. They were also controlled in World War II.

The need for continuation of rent control was apparent, the Council said in a resolution, by an "acute shortage of rental housing accommodations as evidenced by a vacancy rate of 2.77 percent" or about 57,000 apartments.

State law permits the extension of rent control if the vacancy rate is under 5 percent. But a number of Councilmen, during a discussion on the extension, warned that there was a movement effort in Albany to either date or eliminate rent control in the city.

Sharp Rise Feared

The resolution, which called for the continuation of regulations and controls of residential rents and evictions, stated: "Unless residential rents and evictions continue to be regulated and controlled, excessive rent increase and eviction from falling to pay such increases will produce threats to the public health, safety and general welfare."

The two councilmen who voted against extending rent control were Edward V. Curry and Anthony R. Gaeta, both Democrats of Staten Island, where there is a dearth of apartment houses.

The two contended that it was the responsibility of government rather than landlords to subsidize tenants who could not afford to pay rent increases.

For Passover Season, Some Symbolic Foods Enhanced by an Expert

The New York Times/Tyros Datas

Almond Macaroons

4 egg yolks
1 cup sugar
1/2 teaspoon almond extract or 1/4 teaspoon rubbing
2 cups ground, unblanched almonds
40 blanched almond halves

1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease two cookie sheets.
2. Beat egg yolks with sugar until lemon-colored and thick enough to ribbon. Stir in extract or nutmeg and almonds, and chill until mixture can be handled without sticking, about 1/2 hour.
3. Pinch up bits of mixture and roll into balls slightly smaller than walnuts. Place 1-inch apart on cookie sheets. Top each with a blanched half-almond. Bake for 10 minutes, or until set and faintly golden. Do not overbake.

Yield: About 40 macaroons.

Passover Bagels

1 cup water
1/2 cup margarine or butter
2 cups matzoh meal
1 tablespoon sugar
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
6 eggs

1. Bring water to the boil in a 2-quart saucepan and add shortening. When shortening has melted, remove from heat and add the dry ingredients all at once.
2. Beat rapidly over medium heat, using a wooden spoon, until the mixture forms a ball and leaves the side of the pan. Remove from heat.

3. Add eggs, one at a time, beating each in thoroughly before adding the next.
4. Preheat oven to 375 degrees.
5. Using two tablespoons dipped in cold water, drop 15 peaked rounds on to a large greased baking sheet, placing them about 2 inches apart. Dip the handle tip of a wooden spoon in cold water, and with it make a round hole in the center of each bagel.
6. Bake for about 1 hour, or until puffed up and golden

By MIMI SHERATON

While many religious holidays have some traditional foods as part of their celebrations, Passover, the Jewish spring festival of deliverance, seems unique in that the Seder, the main portion of the ceremonial observance, takes place around the dinner table. There the story of the Israelites' flight from Egyptian bondage is told, to a great extent, through symbolic foods and wine.

At both of the Seders held on the first and second nights of this eight-day observance—this year, April 14 and 15—the tables are set with a precisely prescribed group of symbolic foods.

Some reminders

Among these, a roasted lamb bone is a reminder of the sacrificial Paschal lamb, a roasted egg represents an ancient festival offering as well as rebirth, a bitter herb such as fresh horseradish recalls the bitterness of bondage, the apple and nut salad, charoseth, stands for the mortar with which ancient Hebrews built the cities of the Pharaoh, and sweet herbs such as parsley or watercress are reminders of spring and growth.

Hard-cooked eggs are served lightly bathed with salt water that is reminiscent of tears shed during enslavement, and wine is an offering to the prophet Elijah, and is drunk four times during the ceremony.

The most typical and specialized food that appears on the Seder table and throughout the Passover week is matzoh, the flat, crisp, bland wafers baked of flour and water, most traditionally without any salt.

A reminder of the unleavened bread the Jews ate during their flight across the desert when they could not take the time to let yeast doughs rise, matzoh is also ground into meals, both fine and coarse, to substitute for conventional flour, forbidden during this holiday.

The result is a whole repertoire of dishes with a distinctive character, generally considered Passover specialties, although many are popular enough to be eaten at other times during the year. Perhaps the best known are the light blond dumplings, knaidlach, usually served in chicken soup; puffy, lemon-scented matzoh meal pancakes; and matzoh brie, broken wafers, briefly soaked in boiling water then coated with egg and crisply fried, well seasoned with salt and white pepper.

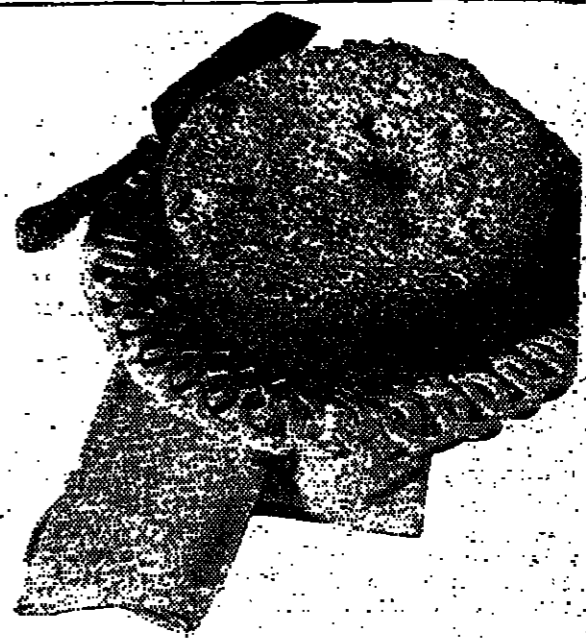

Most simply, matzohs become downright addictive when spread with softened sweet butter and sprinkled with coarse salt, or when rubbed with cut cloves of garlic, then lightly moistened with water and salted and slipped into a hot oven for a few minutes to swell into fragrant puffs.

From a Book

But there are many other delectable and unusual variations possible on this theme, several of which are taught each year in the kosher cooking classes, held at the Y.M.-Y.W.H.A., at 92d Street and Lexington Avenue.

Taught by Mrs. Hanna Goodman, an Israeli who is retiring soon to her homeland, the dishes tasted there during two recent classes seemed well worth passing on. All were taken from Mrs. Goodman's interesting and well-done book, "Jewish Cooking Around the World," (Bloch Publishing Company, 915 Broadway, $6.95).

While most of the recipes Mrs. Goodman demonstrated were for sweets and desserts, the roast lamb was included as a particularly suitable Passover entrée, along with the festive carrot ring, much like sweet potato in flavor.

Chocolate Nut Torte

6 eggs, separated
1 1/2 cups sugar
1 cup walnuts, chopped
4 ounces semisweet chocolate, grated
2 Delicious apples, peeled, cored and grated
1/2 cup matzoh meal
Confectioners' sugar, for garnish

1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees.
2. Beat egg yolks with sugar until lemon-colored and thick enough to ribbon. Gently stir in walnuts, chocolate, apples and matzoh meal.
3. Beat egg whites until they form stiff peaks but are not dry. Fold into egg yolk mixture, gently but thoroughly, using spatula.

4. Turn mixture into 9-inch springform bake for 45-min. hour, or until top back when pressed with a finger. Before removing from pan, invert. Serve with confectioners' sugar.

Coconut Pudding

1 fresh coconut
6 eggs, separated
1 cup sugar
Juice and grated rind of 2 lemons
1/2 cup coconut milk
Fresh strawberries, for garnish, or 1/2 cup flaked, sweetened coconut

1. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease an 8-by-8-inch baking pan or a 13-by-8-oval baking dish.
2. With a sharp instrument, such as an ice pick, make a hole in the soft eye of the coconut. Drain and strain the milk and reserve. Crack the coconut and dig out meat, removing brown skin. Grate coconut meat in a blender, a food processor or on a hand-grater.

3. Beat egg yolks with sugar until lemon-colored and thick enough to ribbon. Add grated coconut along with lemon juice and rind. Beat in coconut milk.
4. Beat egg whites until they stand in snowy peaks. Fold into coconut mixture, gently but thoroughly, using a rubber spatula.

5. Turn mixture into 8-by-8-inch pan or until custard is set.
6. Slice sweetener if necessary. Slice custard into desired size and top with strawberry or other fruit.
7. As an alternative, sprinkle with nut on top of pudding, then slide for three or four until golden brown.
Yield: 8 servings.

The Art of Music Meets the Craft of Instrument-Making

By LISA HAMMEL

A particular kind of craftsman who may work and yet take months to finish one object. You get much of a living from your work, say the involved, because there's just so much you can do in one thing. After trying of all, after all that labor, you're not made something viable until the moment is completed. Are these remarkably devoted craftsmen? The makers of musical instruments.

The making of musical instruments is, of course, an old art. But in recent times it has been limited to the work of artisans—folk craftsmen who whittle, for example, master fabricators of classical instruments. However, a new kind of musical instrument has begun to come into being in increasing numbers: people who both care about music and who work with their hands.

Workshops
There are now, said Susan Caust Farrell, apparently a number of people operating out of their own workshops who are engaged in this craft. Mrs. Farrell, who is a restorer of instruments for the Metropolitan Museum of Art until she moved down to Florida about a year ago, is presently documenting the musical instrument makers of this country for a book she is preparing. She has already collected over 2,000 names, she assumes there must be more she does not yet know.

As she said, touch all age groups, and complexity of social, economic, educational and geographical backgrounds. They make everything from folk instruments to reproductions of Renaissance and Baroque instruments to contemporary strings, woodwinds and instruments.

Mostly they work alone, or with a few assistants. Many if not most of them do this as a way of earning a living. Power tools are used in their work, but most of them have had to learn to use almost all of their own tools for the job, inventing their own techniques. And there are many different systems for this group: their hands instrument, in one way or another, from start to finish.

There has been such an increase of musical instrument makers in recent years? Mrs. Farrell thinks with a growing need "to work independently more control over your life."

of Music
"Music," she added, "has become increasingly important, especially younger people. All kinds and more people today seem to want to make music."

The New York State Craftsmen, the organization that sponsors the annual International Craft Show and Fair at the New York Coliseum, decided the interest was great enough to warrant a continuous lecture and demonstration which will run the full length of the fair.

The workshops on Thursday and will continue through the weekend. Musical instrument makers from all over the country will be there to talk about their craft at two-hour sessions from 1 P.M. to 7 P.M. each day. The speakers will be Thomas A. Hom.

Mr. Hom was a painter once, working in a frame shop himself. He happened also to be studying music at the time and because he couldn't afford a piano, he tried making one.

"It was the most exciting experience of my life—working on it when I finished it." And it established for him.

He worked informally for several years with a luthier

Harry Vas Dias holds up three of the Baroque oboes that he made by hand.

Frank O'Brien checks the inside of one of the 65 banjos he has turned out.

(a maker of stringed instruments) in England. For the last few years he has been making classical guitars and lutes in a storefront workshop in Greenwich Village, where the sun spills through plants onto a faded green velvet window seat and beyond onto the glowing golden bowls of lutes, the gleaming wood of guitars.

He is assisted in his work by Howard Vogel, a professional musician and teacher.

'A Good Team'

"We're a good team," Mr. Vogel said, referring to the fact that he brings his professional musicianship to the work while Mr. Hom brings his highly specialized crafts skills.

Mr. Hom nodded. "But you can't have too many cooks," he said, "because there are so many decisions to be made all along the way. As you work you have to listen to the wood and hear what it tells you. You get involved with it on so many different levels."

"And everyone brings something different to it," he added. "You can't duplicate a Stradivarius, for example. You'd have to duplicate the man."

"The kind of reward you get from this is so different from music," Mr. Vogel said. "This is so tangible."

Harry Vas Dias has spent countless hours in museums inspecting, sketching and measuring Baroque oboes. For 20 years he was an oboist with various symphony orchestras, but a few years ago he decided that what he really wanted to do was make them.

He already had some acquaintance with woodworking but took a machine shop course because he had to make his own tools. He has since made 26 oboes, but only recently did he decide he was arriving at his goal of making a true reproduction of a Baroque oboe.

"Just in the last weeks I've arrived at a point where it's really working," said Mr. Vas Dias happily. When Frank O'Brien came back from the Philippines after 20 years in the export business, he came across an old banjo he'd had when he was 9. He rebuilt it and a while afterward, when he took an early retirement and was looking for a hobby, he turned to making banjos by hand, learning as he went along.

The hobby turned into a business. Mr. O'Brien has made 65 banjos since he began operating out of a neat basement workshop in his pleasant house on a suburban street in Larchmont, N.Y. He sells to students (he also teaches banjo) and professionals, and also does repair work.

Weekly Rehearsals

In recent years, however, he has become more interested in making music since he teamed up with Lewis Pudney, a Larchmont neighbor who is also retired and who for many years was a theater pianist. They play mostly in nursing homes and rehearse together every week.

But although he has slowed down his production recently, his feelings remain about the same. "When I get almost near the end," he said, "I get as nervous as I would if I were going out to play a job, waiting to hear how that banjo is going to sound."

We've been selling Barney Lipman's chickens for 30 years, because we know it takes a gentle man to make a gentle chicken.

Up there in Maine, Barney Lipman's been raising chickens for so long, he acts like he's their mother. He makes sure they get plenty of that clean, clear, crisp Maine air because it's good for them. And he's as fussy as any mother about what they eat. Would you believe he's even got a Doctor of Poultry Science from the University of Illinois supervising their diet to make sure they get all their vitamins! He gives every chicken plenty of room to run around in... and he never, ever says an unkind word to them.

Now, we've got to admit that when we first heard Barney's theories of chicken-raising, we raised an eyebrow. But that was before we tasted his plump, tender, golden delicious chickens.

That taste convinced us Barney's right. As a matter of fact, we're so convinced that we don't sell any other chicken at Waldbaum's but gently-raised Lipman.

CONSUMER NOTES

A Guide to Buying Air-Conditioners

By WILL LISSNER

Around the country buyers of air-conditioners have to take into account the E. E. R.'s energy efficiency ratios to make sure they get the most efficient machine. This tells them how many thermal units of cooling power the machine delivers per watt of power used. But in New York City it's much simpler. Regulations of the Department of Consumer Affairs require sellers of air-conditioners to report to their customers in advertisements and on posted placards how much it costs to operate each machine for the cooling season. The department directed the sellers to update their calculations effective tomorrow to reflect an increase in the cost of energy from 7.78 cents a kilowatt hour to 8.72 cents.

The formula prescribed by the department regulations for determining the cost of energy for operating an air-conditioner is as follows: Kilowattage rating of the machine times the cost of electricity per kilowatt hour (now 8.72 cents as charged by Con Ed) times 700 hours (average amount of time consumers use an air-conditioner in one year) equals estimated yearly cost of electricity for operating the air-conditioner. A comparison is made as follows: Take two machines each providing 8,500 British thermal units (B.T.U.'s) in cooling capacity. One draws 1,700 watts of power, the other 980 watts.

The first machine, the one drawing 1,700 watts, costs for operation during the average season 1.7 times .0872 times 700. This comes to $103.77. The second machine costs 0.98 times .0872 times 700, or $59.82. The seller has to do the arithmetic. With the formula worked out, the consumer can tell at a glance that the second machine is substantially cheaper to operate than the first and hence is more efficient—it delivers more thermal units of cooling per watt.

Engineers figure the E.E.R. by dividing the B.T.U.'s per hour by the watts of power used. One machine might have an E.E.R. of 6.3 while another one of 8.8. The latter would be the more efficient—the higher the E.E.R., the lower the operating cost. In fact, the machine with an E.E.R. of 8.8 would cost 28 percent less to operate than one with 6.3.

With the heating season almost over, most homeowners are tempted to ignore suggestions that they check the insulating systems of their houses. But the cooling season is not far off and many families spend as much for energy for cooling as for heating.

One good guide to check the efficiency of the home for cooling (and heating) is the National Bureau of Standards publication "Making the Most of Your Energy Dollars in Home Heating and Cooling" (70 cents from the Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402).

On the back cover is a list of sources of useful information on making energy conservation improvements in an existing house. The time to cut the energy bill is now, not next winter.

The Hot Dog Gains Integrity

After July 1 frankfurter labels specifying that the hot dog is made of "all" beef will disappear from meat counters. "Pure" will drop off most labels and so will "100 percent."

The change in labeling was brought about by a court decision that "all" means "wholly, completely, exclusively and solely." Since most processed meat and poultry products contain, at least, small amounts of seasoning and curing agents, they do not comply with the court's decision.

The United States Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service extended the decision to "pure" and to "100 percent." If lard is to be labeled "pure lard," it must contain only lard, the service holds, and the same is true for the product formerly sold as "pure pork sausage."

The change comes on the heels of a new standard of composition, now in effect, for the product known as Italian sausage.

This must now be an uncured, unsmoked sausage in a casing or in link, bulk or patty form, containing at least 85 percent pork, or a combination of pork and fat the total of which contains not more than 35 percent fat, salt, pepper and either fennel or anise spices, or a combination of the two.

It may contain a few other spices, such as paprika, and flavoring, red or green pepper, garlic, sugar and onions. If appropriately labeled, it may include beef or veal and be sold as "Italian sausage with beef" or "Italian sausage with veal." The new standard reduces the old fat limit from 50 percent, requires trichinae treatment when pork is combined with beef or veal, allows for different formulations in different areas of the country and provides for Italian sausage without pork for those who, for religious or dietary reasons, can't eat pork.

End Foreseen

To Cyclamate Ban

Abbott Laboratories of North Chicago, Ill., manufacturer of the artificial sweetener Sucaryl, has alerted its customers to be prepared for an end to the Government ban on cyclamates.

In a letter sent out over the signature of Harry E. Upton, the company's president, retailers were encouraged to begin to control inventory "closely so as not to be heavily stocked when new, improved Sucaryl with cyclamate becomes available."

As a result of the Government ban on cyclamates, imposed when a test suggested that the artificial sweetener caused bladder tumors in rats, saccharin was substituted in Sucaryl brand sweeteners.

The letter said: "The return of the original, better-tasting Sucaryl liquor and tablets in a safe cyclamate form will be welcomed by the many users of artificial sweeteners, and Abbott Laboratories anticipates renewed rapid growth in the market."

Last January, a Government advisory panel concluded that there was not enough evidence to place a warning label on cyclamates. The six-member committee of academic scientists headed by Dr. Arnold Brown of the Mayo Medical School in Rochester, Minn., also said that on the basis of tests, cyclamates could not be completely cleared of all cancer-causing potential.

"Science today is just not good enough to answer the question to everyone's satisfaction," he said. The committee's report was sent to Dr. Frank J. Rausher, the director of the National Cancer Institute, who communicated its findings to the Food and Drug Administration, which has been weighing the request of Abbott Laboratories, the principal manufacturer of cyclamates prior to the ban, to return the cyclamate to the market.

Item-Pricing May Get Reprieve in Supermarkets With Electronic Check-Out

ANCS CERRA, a supermarket industry spokesman, said that the industry has been "voluntarily" re-examining its pricing practices. He said that the industry has been "voluntarily" re-examining its pricing practices. He said that the industry has been "voluntarily" re-examining its pricing practices.

Consumer groups, including the Consumer Federation of America and the National Consumers Congress, hailed the recommendation as a major victory and have offered to withdraw their support of item-pricing legislation if all the supermarket chains in the country will commit themselves to retention of item-pricing.

Already, four states and some localities have passed mandatory item-pricing laws; legislation is also being considered by the Congress and in 15 other states, according to a spokesman for the National Association of Food Chains. Industry executives have opposed the laws because they did not believe that removal of item-pricing would hamper shoppers in determining prices and because they saw passage of the laws as inhibiting development of the electronic check-out system.

This system involves the use of electronic scanners that can read a series of lines and spaces printed on food packages. The lines and spaces, known as the universal product code, identify the item, and a computer programmed by the supermarket matches the item to its price. The system offers the industry a variety of economic benefits, among them better inventory and theft control, and the ability to measure exactly the influence on sales of things like shelf location and advertising. Another benefit could be a reduction in labor costs because price-marking would not be necessary.

Only 51 of the 50,000 supermarkets in the country have been equipped with the systems so far, and only in six have item prices been removed. The research study was commissioned by the Ad Hoc Committee of the Grocery Industry for the Development of the Universal Product Code, and was supervised by a subcommittee that included representatives of three major supermarket chains, a consumer advocate, a representative of labor and representatives of trade groups.

They were allowed to look at shelf tags in the scanner stores or package prices in the conventional stores. In the scanner stores, 88 percent gave the correct price, while 96 percent of the conventional-store shoppers came up with the right price. Price Awareness. Another finding was that 40 percent of the shoppers said they had difficulty seeing prices, while 15 percent of the shoppers in the conventional stores reported such difficulty. This difficulty apparently translated itself into a decision by 43 percent of the scanner-store shoppers to take their business elsewhere within two weeks of the original shopping trip, while only 26 percent of the conventional store shoppers switched stores.

"I'm quite surprised by the findings," said Robert Wegman, chairman of the board of Wegman's Supermarkets, a regional chain with 32 stores in upstate New York. "I really didn't think that removal of prices would cause consumers to lose price awareness."

Mr. Wegman is on the board of directors of the Supermarket Institute, a major trade association, and he said he intended to bring the recommendation of the subcommittee to the directors, and that he felt strongly "that they will endorse it." A spokesman for the National Association of Food Chains said the recommendation would be put forward favorably to the next meeting of that organization, which will take place in May. Approval of the recommendation by these trade groups apparently will not satisfy the Consumer Federation of America or the National Consumers Congress. Ellen Zavel, president of the congress, said that the group was insisting on individual guarantees from the chains. But she said the group wanted to avoid legislation, if possible, and considered "revolutionary" the cooperation between the industry and consumer leaders that was involved in the item pricing study.

Traditional Dishes Of Passover (Cont'd)

Haroset

2 large apples, preferably McIntosh
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup pitted dates
1/2 cup shelled, unblanched almonds
1/2 cup shelled walnuts
1 teaspoon powdered ginger
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1/4 to 1/3 cup sweet red wine

- Quarter, peel and core apples.
- Grind or chop together apples, raisins, dates and nuts.
- Add ginger, cinnamon and enough wine to make a spreadable but not too liquid mass. Let ripen in refrigerator several hours before serving. This will keep in the refrigerator for about two weeks.

Yield: About 3 1/2 cups. This sweet and spicy apple and nut salad is served at Seders spread on to small pieces of matzoh that each guest receives. But it is also delicious spooned on to the Passover bagels, or at other times of the year on hot toasted English muffins, and combines especially well with cream cheese.

Roast Shoulder of Lamb

4 pound shoulder of lamb, with bones cracked
Salt and pepper
6 to 8 cloves of garlic, peeled and cut in half 3 tablespoons margarine, softened
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1/2 cup dry white wine or water
3 pounds new potatoes, cooked, optional
1/2 cup chopped parsley

- Preheat oven to 350 degrees.
- Season meat on all sides with salt and pepper. Insert garlic cloves between cracked bones. Rub with margarine. Place meat in an open roasting pan, boned side down. A rack is unnecessary.
- Roast for 15 minutes, then baste with combined lemon juice and white wine or water. Roast about 2 1/2 hours, or until tender, basting with pan drippings several times.
- If you like, arrange cooked potatoes around the meat, coating the halves with pan drippings, 30 minutes before the roast is done. Place meat and potatoes on a serving platter and sprinkle potatoes with parsley.

Note: Because there are no Passover herbs available on the market, none have been used in this dish. However, for those less strict in their observance of this holiday, or at other times of the year, a teaspoonful of oregano, sprinkled over the lamb before roasting, adds a pleasant accent. Because hindquarters of animals are not kosher, this Greek-inspired roast is made of the shoulder cut, a tender and economical substitute for the costlier leg.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings

Carrot Ring

1 pound raw carrots (about 7 medium size)
1/2 cup margarine, melted
1/2 cup matzoh meal
3 tablespoons potato starch
1/2 cup white wine
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon powdered ginger
Juice and grated rind of 1 lemon
1 egg
1/2 teaspoon salt

- Preheat oven to 350 degrees.
- Grease ring mold with a little margarine; scrub, wash and grate carrots.
- Cream margarine and matzoh meal together. Dissolve potato starch in wine, and add to the margarine together with carrots and remaining ingredients. Turn into ring mold, and bake for 1 hour. Unmold on to a serving platter.

Yield: 6 servings

Passover Buying

A complete line of packaged groceries, soaps, paper goods and such unexpected products as toothpaste, mouthwash, aspirin and candles, all kosher for Passover, are available at Leibel Bistrizky's kosher gourmet grocery store, at 27 1/2 Essex Street, near Grand, and at his special Passover warehouse around the corner at 48 Hester Street.

Among the noteworthy products here is russell, a sparkling, tangy fermented beet juice that would take six to eight weeks to make at home, and which is a traditional base for Passover borscht. It can also be purchased at Bistrizky's for $2.51 for half a gallon, or 69 cents a pint. Loosely covered so as not to explode, and stored in the refrigerator, the russell will keep a month before it is cooked. Try it in especially winy beet borscht, cold or hot, plain or enriched with chunks of beef, garlic crushed with salt and pepper, and a hint of bay leaf and allspice.

Russell is basically a variation on the Russian and Polish half-cider, kvass, and used in the same way, not only for borscht, but also to color and flavor grated white horseradish.

There is more to Passover matzoh than meets the eye, and for this season, they are made with extraordinary care to avoid possible leavening. The most authentic are the thin, hard, crackling round matzohs baked before Passover by four Hasidic communities in Brooklyn. Called shmura, or watched, they are made of wheat that is guarded against moisture from the second it is cut. It is ground by hand on a water-driven mill. Mixed with spring water, the dough is rolled and baked and carried to huge, wood-fired stone floor ovens, and the matzohs bake in seconds to an antique charred patina. The result is a tougher, and granier wheat than the commercial product, and the price is understandably high, ranging from $5 to $5.50 per pound.

Shmura matzoh can be purchased Sundays through Thursdays from Kor's Lubavitcher Hand Matzoh Bakery, 460 Albany Avenue, near Empire Boulevard (771-5377), and the Satmar Matzoh Bakery of Congregation Yeshiva Lev, 427 Broadway, near Division Avenue (384-8613); Celem Papa, 133 South Ninth Street near Bedford Avenue (388-0771), and at the Polisher Stiebel Matzoh Bakery, 1285 East 36th Street, near 13th Avenue.

The last named says it has the shortest time from wet flour to baked matzoh, assuring the least chance of leavening, and the matzohs made there are the most professional combination of thinness and flavor. Kor's are thicker, tougher and with a more pronounced wheat flavor, while Celem Papa's is the thinnest and most delicate in texture, and Satmar's the most charred.

Bistrizky has shmura matzoh from Israel for $4 per pound, but it lacks the flavor and crispness of the local products. So did machine-made matzohs from Israel. Anyone who wants to rely on the moderate-priced machine-made domestic matzoh would do well to stick to Streit's, consistently the best tasting commercial brand. The whole-wheat variation is especially good.

WINE TALK

Festival Makes Wide Range of Champagnes Available

By FRANK J. PRIAL

It is time for the Champagne Festival in New York once again. Last year, worried by a serious slump in sales in this country, the French champagne producers and their local promoters came up with a plan. They would get several restaurants to feature champagne and food that can accompany champagne, and they would see to it that the price was reasonable. They tried at Le Marmion on East 49th Street and at the Brasserie on East 53d.

It must have paid off. This year they are doing it again: at Le Marmion and at the St. Moritz Hotel. The festivities at the St. Moritz have been under way since March 12.

What they do is offer 12 champagnes—5 vintage, 5 nonvintage and 2 widely known labels—at $18, $14 and $26 a bottle, and champagne by the glass at $2.75. This goes on in all the restaurants in the hotel.

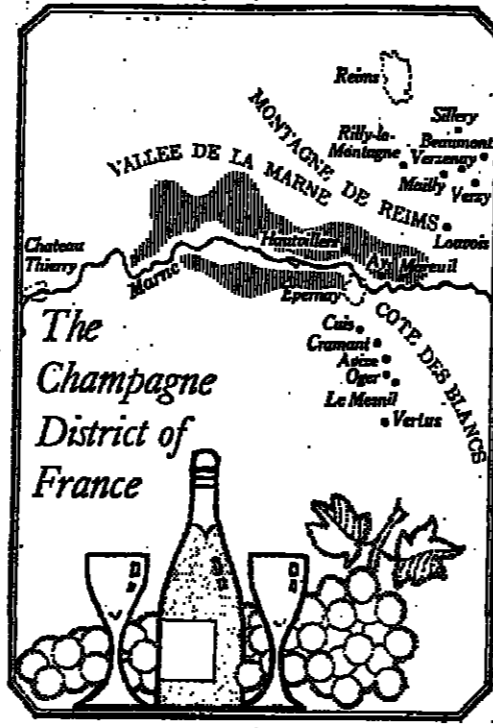

Champagne Dinner Offered

Le Marmion, throughout April, will offer 18 champagnes—14 nonvintage and 4 widely known labels—at $13 and $25, and champagne by the glass at $3.50. There will be a four-course champagne dinner each night. It will include a bottle of nonvintage champagne and it will cost $33 for two.

These prices are roughly equivalent to what the wine costs in the retail stores. Included in the lists of champagnes are lesser known labels such as Pommery-Greco, Lanson and Canard-Duchene. The idea of all this is to get people thinking of champagne in other contexts besides weddings and ship launchings.

Speaking of champagne, there is some more information available now on the Moët-Hennessy activities in California.

Several years ago, Moët-Hennessy, parent company of Moët & Chandon, the largest of all the French champagne companies, bought land, planted vineyards, and announced it would go into the sparkling wine business in California.

Immediately, the question arose: What will they call the stuff? No Frenchman will admit that any sparkling wine made in California or anywhere else in the world is really champagne. But, then, Americans are used to drinking what we call domestic champagne. Will we buy a sparkling wine called something else?

This much is known: The business and the name on the label will be Domaine Chandon. It may be the name of the product as well. According to John Wright, the boss of the Moët operations in the Napa Valley, the plan is to make a superior sparkling wine in the $7.50-to-$9 range, which would put it above most California champagnes and below the better known champagnes from France. It would be in the same price range as the champagnes of Schramsberg, generally acknowledged to be California's and the United States' best, and such top-of-the-line labels as Hains Kornell's Sekt Trocken.

The Moët operation already includes 800 acres of vineyards in both Napa and Sonoma Counties. A winery is under construction near Yountville in the Napa Valley and will be opened later this year, but wine is already being made in leased space in another winery. Later this year, the first 50,000 bottles will be released for sale to the public. Eventual production is expected to be around 100,000 cases a year.

Searching for Blends

There will be no vintage bottlings for several years. For the present, older wines will be used to blend with younger ones, just as is done in the Champagne region of France. And as in France, the Domaine Chandon winemakers continue to search for the proper blend of different grapes.

The first wine scheduled for release was bottled early last year and was made of blends from both the 1973 and 1974 vintages. Bottles are opened regularly to determine how long it will take for the wine to achieve the "nose" that Moët's exacting French enologists expect.

According to Mr. Wright, 1975 was a good year for grapes for sparkling wine and, because sparkling wine grapes are picked early, at lower sugar and higher acid content than grapes for most table wines, Domaine Chandon had all its grapes in before the ruinous rains hit the wine country in late September.

Of the 900 tons of grapes picked last year, two-thirds were pinot noir, 25 percent were chardonnay and the rest were pinot blanc.

Six extraordinary wines—only at Astor Chyys

Everybody carries the great Chateaux and Burgundies. And we do, too. (Except our prices are probably a bit lower.) But only Astor has these extraordinary wines. They're part of our large and fascinating collection of specially purchased wines. They represent only a few of the reasons why Astor is known as the most exciting wine and liquor store in New York. Try them. You'll be everything to gain.

Muscadet Sur Lie 1973 (Chateau de la Sebinis) One of our all-time favorites. Super dry, crisp with exceptional flavor and depth that comes from being allowed to mature with its natural sediment (sur lie). 2.49 Bottle 26.90 Case of 12

Reserva Particular 1961 (Caves Sao Joao) This incredible red wine was recently recommended by New York Magazine. It's full and dry, with a complex and fascinating flavor. It is so big, rich and tannic that you must allow it to breathe for at least an hour. But ever worth the wait. 2.89 Bottle 31.22 Case of 12

Soave 1972 (San Vito) Dry, delightful white Veronese wine, and as its name implies, most suave. You could pay a lot more for this quality of wine—but not at Astor. 1.79 Bottle 19.34 Case of 12

Hermitage Rouge 1971 (Louvvet) Classic red Rhone. Superb vintage. Great body and richness, with the special finesse and bouquet that marks a winner. Winning special case price too. 3.49 Bottle 34.90 Case of 12

Astor French Colombard Dry, light and luscious white wine—one of our big popular line of premium California Varietals. Decidedly unpretentious price for such good wine. 1.29 Bottle 13.94 Case of 12

La Burgette Grand Vin Rouge 1973 We can hardly keep this superlative red wine in stock—it moves so fast. And no wonder, it's round, full, elegant and delicious. (Try the white La Burgette too. It's fantastic for the price—dry, with a taste the nothing short of superb. Both are bottled in Gevre-Chambertin in the heart of Burgundy's Cote d'Or.) 1.99 Bottle 21.50 Case of 12

To Order: Come in (the most fun), call or write. Astor No charge for deliveries of $25.00 or more within the United Parcel Service delivery zone. When ordering mail, please include the sales tax for your area in your check. Sorry, we can't ship outside of New York State (Astor is one block south of 8th St., off Broadway).

Beame Urges Public to Act To Stop School-Budget Bill

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

With blackboard and chalk, Mayor Beame yesterday urged the public to press the Legislature to stop the Stavisky bill, which would cut $150 million from the school budget.

The school budget has been reduced 9.1 percent since 1974. Mr. Beame said, compared with cuts of 19.3 percent in hospital care and 13.7 percent in the Fire Department budget.

Under the bill, the percentage of funds allotted to education in the city's budget would be the same as the average spent by the city for education in the last three years.

The City Council, meanwhile, heard William M. Ellinghaus, Beame's chief of staff, urge the council to support the Mayor's plan.

Educator in Assembly

Leonard Price Stavisky

Special to The New York Times ALBANY, March 30—There is a certain appropriateness in the fact that Assemblyman Leonard P. Stavisky is leading the attempt to override the Governor's veto of the Assembly's bill to earmark a fixed portion of the city's expense budget for the school's budget.

His professional ties are close to the educational and academic world.

Aided Stark's Campaign This was true at Mr. Stavisky's beginnings in politics, too. Fresh out of Columbia with a master's degree in American history, he was brought into Stark's campaign for the Brooklyn borough presidency as a researcher in 1948.

Manhattan's Robert F. Wagner running an insurgent campaign for Mayor, Mr. Stark entered and won the race for President of the City Council in 1954.

Leonard Price Stavisky was born in the Bronx on Oct. 11, 1925, and grew up on the other end of the "Thruway Neck" Bridge, that now connects the Queens district to his present district.

Other City Unions Watch Transit Talks for Trends

By DAMON STETSON

Leaders of major city unions with labor contracts expiring at the end of June are closely watching the transit negotiations, which may set a pattern that they will try to match.

John Delury, president of the United Sanitation Workers' Association, agreed that whatever happened in the transit talks would have a significant impact on the bargaining policy of the other unions this year.

Productivity Snags City Transit Talks

lengthening the workday to generate money and then paying the workers for the longer day.

There are indications, however, that work practices and job classifications might yet provide a means for productivity savings that the union fears that sufficient money could not be generated that way to make it worthwhile.

Nonetheless, some observers predicted that a way would be found to reconcile the opposing views, adding that a settlement might require more of a public relations solution than a labor one.

Domino Effect Feared Another factor, of course, is the wage freeze imposed under the emergency financial control law—a factor which the Transit Authority and the Transport Workers' Union also have to cope.

Another city official said that he was gravely concerned about the implications for the city and its labor relations if there was a settlement in transit that the city could not match in mayoral agencies.

The principal negotiators declined all comment yesterday on what was going on or what avenues were being explored.

Jack Bigel, a pension consultant and adviser to some city unions, was one who did not think that the transit bargaining would necessarily set a pattern for city unions.

Two years ago when the authority and the union reached a settlement providing for a 14 percent increase over two years plus two cost-of-living adjustments, the basic terms did set a pattern for future settlements between the city and the municipal unions.

The city accepted the pattern and insisted in its bargaining that settlement not go beyond that pattern.

The city union contracts were for two years, July 1, 1974, to July 1, 1976. Those expiring as of midnight June 30 include contracts of District Council 37, the firemen, the sanitation men, the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association and others.

As a result of the fiscal crisis, the city unions, except for the P.B.A., negotiated wage deferral agreements last summer that became effective Sept. 1, 1975.

Under these agreements, workers earning more than $15,000 a year had the 6 percent wage increase of July 1, 1975, deferred for a year, effective Sept. 1, 1976; those earning between $10,000 and $15,000 had 4 percent of the increase deferred, and those earning less than $10,000 had 2 percent of the increase deferred.

The unions with deferral agreements are receiving the cost-of-living adjustments called for under their original contracts.

The Transit Authority is seeking increases in productivity and changes in work rules to achieve economies and greater efficiency of operation. Specific proposals include the hiring of part-time employees; elimination of the paid lunch period, calculation of pensions to be based on the final year's earnings, not in excess of 120 percent of base pay, rather than the total of earnings and overtime.

The Transport Workers Union, which is playing the lead role in the negotiations, is seeking a "substantial" but unspecified wage increase, incorporation in base rates of the 22 cents an hour in cost-of-living increases received under the current contract, and further cost-of-living adjustments to protect workers' purchasing power under a new contract. Some current rates are $5.52 an hour for a railroad porter; $6.73 an hour for a bus operator; $7.24 an hour for a motorman, and $7.47 an hour for a power-cable maintainer. The average annual salary for a 40-hour week is $13,700, and with overtime and allowances, $16,541.

Specific proposals include the hiring of part-time employees; elimination of the paid lunch period, calculation of pensions to be based on the final year's earnings, not in excess of 120 percent of base pay, rather than the total of earnings and overtime.

During the morning rush, there will be no scheduled trains to both directions. The trip will take about 16 minutes, and cost 30 cents, the regular PATH fare.

Within the city limits, licensed taxi operators will be permitted to pick up passengers at different locations and take them to different destinations. If a strike is called by the T.W.U., however, the Taxi and Limousine Commission warned passengers not to pay more than the figure on the taxi meter. Similarly, the commission warned passengers not to deal with drivers who offered to drive for flat fees and not use the taxi meter.

As previously announced, the city's 60 municipal parking lots and garages, which have 13,803 long-term and 3,200 short-term parking spaces, will be augmented by several thousand additional spaces at other city facilities. Staten Island ferries will operate at a 10-minute headway beginning at 7 A.M. instead of 8 A.M., with vehicles carried on every other trip.

The Traffic Department will reverse traffic lanes on major arteries during peak traffic periods to provide more lanes on bridges and in tunnels.

Many big corporations and groups of businesses already formed plans to bring their workers into and out of the city. A group of banks cautions must be given interviews.

About New York

A Palsy Victim, on Fifth Avenue

By TOM BUCKLEY

Seeing Harriet Wolper standing there in front of Saks Fifth Avenue, most people look away and hurry their steps. Others, moved to pity by the sight of this sadly palsied woman, place a coin or two in the canister she holds.

Miss Wolper, who is in her 30's, is scarcely five feet tall. Her body is skewed to the left. Her left hand is twisted. Her gait is crablike. Over her soiled plaid overcoat hangs a white sandwich board. On it is painted in red:

PLEASE HELP ME! I AM CEREBRAL PALSY! It seems safe to say that many of those who give to her, glancing at the sign, do so under the impression that she is collecting under the auspices of a recognized charity.

To the comparatively few who ask her whom she represents, Miss Wolper says, in a stammering, guttural speech, that she is trying to collect enough money to build a home for youngsters who are victims of the ailment.

"They got no place to go," she said, a bystander the other day. "Look at me. I've been in Willowbrook. There's no place else for people like me."

The reference to the infamous institution for the mentally retarded on Staten Island seemed calculated to meet the hardest heart.

No donation being forthcoming, Miss Wolper shuffled back to the center of the sidewalk to resume her soliciting. The competition was keen. A man was buttonholing passersby on behalf of what he described as a free breakfast program in East Harlem. He also lacked any supporting credentials. Three young male gamblers were trying to transform wrinkled pennies into crisp green money.

When a minute or two had passed without a coin, Miss Wolper would shout, "Please help cerebral palsy." Her voice carried remarkably strongly above the traffic noise.

Two pretty blonde girls, aged about 8 and 10, heard her as they left Saks with their mother. They tugged at her sleeve, whispered to her, and when she finally extracted a coin from her purse, the older one with great delicacy walked over and dropped it in Miss Wolper's canister.

From time to time Miss Wolper returned to the place where the bystander was loitering under the store's green awning, to continue her discussion.

She said in reply to questions that she had been collecting. As a result of the fiscal crisis, the city unions, except for the P.B.A., negotiated wage deferral agreements last summer that became effective Sept. 1, 1975.

Officials Feverishly Devise Travel Plans for a Strike

By FRANK J. PRIAL

With a possible citywide transit strike less than two days away, operators of commuter railroads, suburban buses and taxi companies and city and corporate officials worked feverishly yesterday to devise plans to move hundreds of thousands of people into and out of the city.

The Normandy invasion wasn't planned this well, said one railroad spokesman, "but it probably was not as big as scheduled stops west of Floral." A strike of the Park on mainline trains, and the Port Washington branch, has been scheduled to begin at 5 A.M. tomorrow if no contract has been reached.

The commuter railroads will add extra service where possible: extra parking areas will be set up adjacent to railroad stops; parking regulations in the city will be eased, and group riding in taxis in the city will be permitted. But commuters contact plan on taking a New York Airways helicopter intruck yesterday.

And Queens residents cannot hope for much help from the Long Island Rail Road. "Our system is already operating at capacity during the rush hours," the railroad said yesterday, "and we can't possibly handle the flood of suburban and bus riders that would come from the city during the strike."

Extra shuttle trains will begin operating at 5:30 A.M. and continue at 10-minute intervals throughout the morning rush. They will begin again in the afternoon as passenger demand builds up. Regular service of the Penn Central's New Haven Railroad will not be affected, but the shuttles will stop at all Penn stations except Wakefield and Melrose, because the railroad said, those stations do not lend themselves well to safe crowd control, and other stations are nearby.

Regular service will be maintained on commuter lines from Nassau and Suffolk ridges into the city.

bound crowds at Pennsylvania Station. This time, the railroad is urging all commuters to have a ticket before they arrive for their outbound trip. Ticket offices are dispensing wallet-size cards outlining crowd-control plans that will be put into effect at the station if the strike takes place.

During the morning rush, there will be no scheduled trains to both directions. The trip will take about 16 minutes, and cost 30 cents, the regular PATH fare.

Many big corporations and groups of businesses already formed plans to bring their workers into and out of the city. A group of banks cautions must be given interviews.

As a result of the fiscal crisis, the city unions, except for the P.B.A., negotiated wage deferral agreements last summer that became effective Sept. 1, 1975.

Under these agreements, workers earning more than $15,000 a year had the 6 percent wage increase of July 1, 1975, deferred for a year, effective Sept. 1, 1976; those earning between $10,000 and $15,000 had 4 percent of the increase deferred, and those earning less than $10,000 had 2 percent of the increase deferred.

The unions with deferral agreements are receiving the cost-of-living adjustments called for under their original contracts.

The city union contracts were for two years, July 1, 1974, to July 1, 1976. Those expiring as of midnight June 30 include contracts of District Council 37, the firemen, the sanitation men, the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association and others.

Nassau County will provide special parking areas where city-bound commuters may meet to share their ride. The lots will be at Hempstead Lake State Park, at Christopher Morley Park and at Eisenhower Park. Many Nassau buses that normally go to subway stops in Queens will be diverted to Long Island Rail Road stations, and departures will be increased during rush hours.

The Automobile Club of New York urged the city to ban all parking on major north and south arteries in Manhattan, except for designated car-pool pickup and discharge locations, to restrict truck deliveries to the evening hours, to open the parks to commuter parking and to cover all street-construction openings during business hours.

Judge Tenney ordered welfare officials to submit a plan to him within 30 days for revising their procedures in conformity with his decision, which resulted from a suit by welfare-seekers at the city's 44 income-maintenance centers.

The suit contended that frequent delays and long lines at the welfare centers deterred many people from seeking and obtaining public assistance that they were entitled to receive under Federal laws.

The case, called Perez v. Lavine, was filed against the City and State Departments of Social Welfare by legal services under the law for the poor.

The result of school integration efforts, he said, was an action to bring about equal whites has the over-whelming support of a group of blacks and whites.

There is probably a substantial black element in the schools," he said.

The University of South Boston professor appeared at the hearing, but he was not present for the remainder of the session.

Dr. Coleman argued that the most serious situation left by the integration was the pattern of young, middle-class families toward the area of the St. Paul and Ave. C. The result of school integration efforts, he said, was an action to bring about equal whites has the over-whelming support of a group of blacks and whites.

would cause over-planting and drastically reduced prices. They say it would have the same effect on peanuts that the Butz policy has had on other crops, that it would drive out small farmers and concentrate the industry in the hands of the largest operators.

The peanut was first planted in this part of the South because cotton, once the king of Southern crops, would not grow well here. The soil in these pine hills is alternately clay and sand and is not very fertile.

Peanuts grow under the ground like potatoes, clinging to the roots of the plants. Planting, cultivating, weeding and harvesting there were once back-breaking work requiring large numbers of men and mules. Now most of the work is done by machines and chemical pesticides.

Early spring is planting time here. This week the fields are plowed almost to the railroad track at the edge of Plains in anticipation of next month's planting.

Carter's or Williams's

Men drive up and down Highway 280 in pickup trucks or find anxious bits of business to attend to at one of the peanut warehouses, Carter's or Williams's. They stand around farmyards or kill time at one of the two service stations—Carter's or Williams's—talking peanuts.

"My daddy raised peanuts," said Donald Tanner, leaning on the hood of his pickup. "I been messing with peanuts since 1930."

He progressed through the familiar complaints about Washington and the outsiders threatening his livelihood. His son was mentioned and a visitor asked the son's name.

"Call him anything but Earl Butz," Mr. Tanner said, and the others snorted with appreciative laughter.

The Tanners, father and son—the son is known only as Buzzy—raise 124 acres of peanuts in addition to keeping a small herd of cattle and cultivating small amounts of corn and soybeans.

CARTER ACCUSED ON U.S. SUBSIDIES

Denies Butz Charge That He 'Grows Fat' on Payments

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP) — Ford Administration agriculture officials are hoping that Jimmy Carter's connection with the Government's $150 million peanut subsidy program will provide the kind of public and political pressure needed for Congress to kill or radically change the subsidies.

A hotly debated farm issue for years, Federal peanut subsidies took the national political spotlight over the weekend when Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz said that Mr. Carter, a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, had been "growing fat" for years on peanut subsidies. "I'm going to disturb his little playhouse," Dr. Butz declared.

The Secretary said Sunday that Mr. Carter, a former Georgia governor, had participated in a cooperative program tied to Federal subsidies.

"He simply lets his peanuts go to the cooperative," Secretary Butz said. "He gets it indirectly, like any other peanut farmer. It's very cleverly hidden. Everybody in the industry participates in this."

Mr. Carter, through a spokesman, replied: "I don't receive any peanut subsidies, as Mr. Butz should know."

Today, Agriculture Department officials backed away from a direct criticism of Mr. Carter.

In a speech to magazine farm editors, Dr. Butz referred to Mr. Carter only obliquely, saying that the peanut program benefits all peanut producers with its high rate of subsidies.

Basically, Federal law requires the Department of Agriculture to guarantee farmers a minimum price for peanuts and to buy all the farmers cannot sell. Department officials said the program would cost about $155 million this year.

Otis Castleberry, a marketing specialist for the Tobacco and Peanut Division of the Department of Agriculture in Washington, said the records show two payments to Carter farms between 1970 and 1975. One, in 1971, was for $1,280,19, and the other, in 1975, was for $1,448.66.

The 51-year-old Mr. Carter has not been actively involved in the family's farming and warehouse interests since he was elected governor in 1970, although he still derives an income from the family business.

Last year was one of the best in history for Carter's Farms Inc. Production was about 420 tons from the farm's 225.6-acre peanut allotment. The farm also produced about 20,000 bushels of corn.

The Agriculture Department statement today said that 228 acres in Georgia would produce about 375 tons of peanuts this year.

The peanut is still grown on more small, family farms than many other crops. About 1.5 million acres of peanuts were harvested in 1975, but farms of less than 100 acres are common in Georgia, the largest of the peanut-producing states, and across the South and Southwest.

A fair number of black farmers raise peanuts. One is Leonard Wright, who raises them "on the halvers" for Carter Farms Inc. The Carters provide the land, seed and fertilizer. Mr. Wright provides the labor and about $40,000 worth of equipment.

He said yesterday that he had been earning $15,000 to $20,000 a year from peanuts recently. "I make a good living," he said. "I don't think it could be any better."

Mr. Wright opposes changing the law. "I feel like if it's changed people are going to overflood the market and we wouldn't get no price for them," he said. "If they do away with our peanuts, we're just licked."

Instead of changing the law, the says, the Government should get a new Secretary of Agriculture. That sentiment was echoed loudly by other farmers in Sumter County. Many of them accuse Mr. Butz of creating a huge federally financed surplus in an effort to generate Congressional pressure for a change in the law.

Thomas J. Chandler Jr., the head of McCleskey Mills, a company in nearby Americus that shells and sells peanuts, explained their thinking.

Many peanut farmers turn their peanuts over to the Federal Commodity Credit Corporation for a loan that actually becomes a federally guaranteed price. The loan price for the 1975 crop was $394.50 a ton. Of the 1.9 million tons produced, 550,000 tons remained on the Government's hands as surplus.

In years past, Mr. Chandler said, the Commodity Credit Corporation sold the surplus to dealers like himself at bid prices lower than the going market price, and the dealers turned the cheaper peanuts into oil and other products.

But for the last two years, he said, Mr. Butz has refused to cut the price on the surplus peanuts. When the dealers have refused to pay the full market price, he said, Mr. Butz has had the surplus crushed into oil and has sold it for a little more than half the market price—thus assuring a much higher loss to the Government than it would have incurred if it had cut its prices a little and sold to the dealers.

Mr. Chandler pointed to Government statistics showing that the Government's loss on the peanut program had risen from $4.8 million in 1973 to $155 million in 1975.

Some peanut farmers characterize that fast-rising loss as "purposeful mismanagement."

William L. Lanier, a Georgia peanut farmer who heads the Agriculture Department's Tobacco and Peanut Division, disputes that contention. He said in a telephone interview from Washington that Mr. Butz's price policy change was made to put the United States in line with its trading partners in world commerce. He said the United States could not expect other countries to end crop subsidies if it continued to subsidize peanuts.

Besides, he said, growers of other United States crops were beginning to resent having to help pay for the special break the peanut farmers were getting.

Peanut farmers argue that crops like theirs need Federal protection for reasons beyond family-farm stability.

Peanut farming, they say, requires highly specialized equipment that cannot be used for other crops.

Unlike soybeans and grains, peanuts must be sold and used quickly because the oil in them will turn rancid in a relatively short time. Peanuts are even more susceptible to adverse weather than other crops, the farmers contend.

Beyond all that, the lowly goober has had one other reason for keeping its Federal protection. It has friends in high places.

Senator Herman Talmadge, the Georgia Democrat, is Chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee. Representative Dawson Mathis, a Democrat who represents the main peanut district of southwest Georgia, man of the House Agriculture Committee's subcommittee with jurisdiction on nuts.

Those two are ready to go along with compromise peanut legislation. It would worked out this Atsuta. It would peanut acreage by price in 1977, red price support from percent of parity, a farmers to raise all nuts they want for port market while their domestic pr under controls.

Both Mr. Lanier, culture Department, and Mr. Chandler, nut processing, spoke favorably of promise.

February at Salomon.

Here are the highlights of what Salomon Brothers did in February in another month of providing liquidity and raising capital for our clients.

Market making in bonds and money market instruments — $27.6 billion trading volume. Including U.S. Governments, Federal agencies, corporate bonds, Canadian bonds, Eurobonds and money market instruments. Salomon is probably the largest market maker for the broadest range of securities. Our daily inventory of securities in February averaged $2 billion.

Underwriting public offerings of equity securities — $149,250,000. We managed or co-managed 18.2% of all new common and preferred issues brought to market. Our percentage of the industry dollar volume was 14.2%.

Underwriting public offerings of corporate debt securities — $422,000,000. Salomon Brothers managed or co-managed 31% of all new corporate debt issues. Noteworthy is the fact that we accounted for 86% of the industry's entire dollar volume in competitively bid issues. This, we believe, is indicative of the Firm's pricing ability.

Distribution of debt and equity underwritings. We committed for $130.3 million, but actually sold $191.5 million, or 47% more than our commitments.

Stock trading — 33.7 million shares with a total value of $1.1 billion. Single transactions ranged from 100 shares to 400,000 shares. Over 72% of Salomon Brothers' equity transactions in February were 5,000 shares or less.

Private placements/Lease financings — $492,687,000 total volume. Ranged in size from $1 million to $400 million, with volume comprising 27.8% of the industry-wide total. Capital was raised for companies in a variety of industries.

Municipal finance — $899,037,000 managed or co-managed. 28 issues ranged in size from $1.5 million to $180 million, and represented 16.3% of the industry total. Funds raised were for public power systems, pollution control facilities, hospitals, schools, and a variety of other purposes.

You may find our ability to perform in the area of making markets and underwriting securities useful to you. This month. Or in the months to come.

Chance of Passage Better Fed's Role, Loans and Foreign Units Covered

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY JR.

WASHINGTON, March 30—A move that substantially improves the chance that the House will pass the most far-reaching banking legislation since the 1930's, Democrats on the banking committee decided this afternoon to split the bulky package under consideration into three parts to be taken up separately.

At the same time they made detailed price-fixing further modifications in key elements. These included stripping the five present regional Federal Reserve Bank presidents on the Federal Open Market Committee—the body that sets the nation's monetary policy—of their vote.

Another major change deals with what many had considered a fundamental contradiction in the original proposal, giving savings institutions expanded lending powers while preventing them from reducing their very large present commitment to finance housing. The new provisions sharply restrict the percentage of assets that may be lent for other purposes. The original House measure was even more comprehensive than one passed by the Senate by a large margin in December. Representative Henry S. Reuss, Wis., combined meetings with reporters this evening following a caucus of the 23 Democrats

EDITOR SUIT LOST BY FRAUD VICTIMS

U.S. Supreme Court Finds Lack of Intent to Deceive Clears Ernst & Ernst

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—The Supreme Court ruled today that the Federal law against securities fraud does not entitle fraud victims to collect damages from auditors who allegedly were negligent in not detecting the scheme.

The 6-to-3 decision denies investors who are defrauded an important weapon for recovering their losses. It may shield accountants, attorneys, outside directors and other peripheral figures in a corporation from expensive damage suits brought by investors.

The decision came in a suit brought against Ernst & Ernst, one of the nation's major accounting firms, by customers of First Securities Inc. of Chicago, a small brokerage house. The First Securities president, Leaton B. Nay, had induced the customers to invest in penny stock accounts. Mr. Nay converted the money to his own use as the scheme continued from 1942 to 1966. The fraud was discovered when Mr. Nay committed suicide in 1968, leaving a note describing the scheme.

A group of victims sued Ernst & Ernst on grounds that the auditors should have discovered the scheme while examining the company books. The Supreme Court ruled in 1963 that private investor suits are permitted by securities law. But the Court said today that such suits must be based on allegations "of intent to deceive, manipulate or defraud."

The First Securities victims never accused Ernst & Ernst of intending to defraud them but only of negligence in not uncovering the scheme. Writing for the majority, Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. said Congress did not mean to authorize private suits based on negligence when it wrote the securities law.

Justice Powell said that another federal securities law provides for civil damage suits based on negligence and cuts out fairly strict restrictions for them. In dissent, Justice Harry A. Blackmun said, "Perhaps the court is right, but I doubt it."

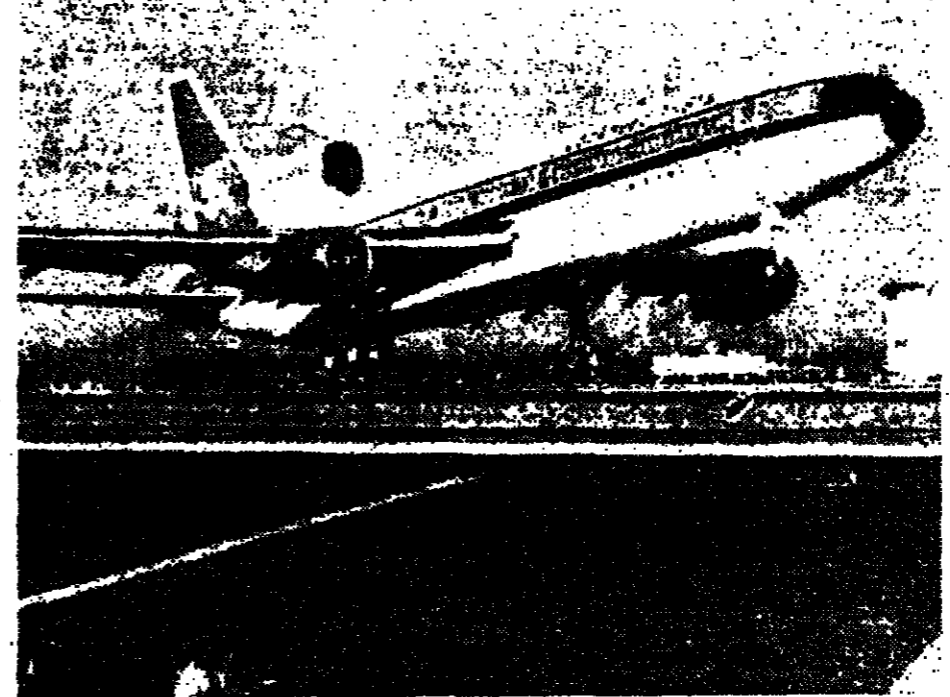

Justice William J. Brennan said the majority's decision "with Justice Powell in the majority" would "leave Warren E. Burger and Justice Potter Stewart, and William J. Brennan II and William H. Rehnquist."

The decision overturned a ruling by the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago which had held that the suit was permissible and should go to trial. The allegation of negligence against Ernst & Ernst had never been put to a trial and today's decision means that it will not be.

Justice John Paul Stevens did not participate in the decision.

Lockheed Starts $500 Million Write-Off Takes Conservative Tristar Stance—1975 Profit Up

Lockheed's giant L-1011 taking off. The corporation said yesterday that it was beginning a write-off of $500 million in past costs.

Takes Conservative Tristar Stance—1975 Profit Up

By RICHARD WITKIN

The Lockheed Aircraft Corporation announced yesterday that, because its overseas payments scandal and the airline industry's recession had increased uncertainty about its jumbo jet investments, it was beginning a 10-year write-off of $500 million in past costs.

The California-based company said its earnings in 1975 had almost doubled those of the year before, climbing from $23.2 million to $45.3 million. Although the write-off at the rate of $50 million a year will have a restrictive effect on Lockheed's net income, financial community sources said there were good prospects that this year's profit would show another increase.

The 1975 earnings equaled $2.86 for each outstanding share, or $2.49 a share on a diluted basis. A dilution of stock will come from the exercise of warrants held by banks and from the conversion of convertible bonds.

These figures compare with the $2.04 a share earned in 1974 on outstanding shares. There was no figure for 1973 since the actions to increase the total number of shares were taken subsequently.

The reversion to a more conservative accounting procedure on the L-1011 jetliner was taken, company sources said, on Lockheed's own initiative. There has been some criticism from financial experts that, in view of the general drying up of sales of large airliners, the listing of investments in the L-1011 program as current assets tended to present an optimistic view of Lockheed's financial condition.

Until now, Lockheed has based its annual accounting on the premise that a total of 300 of the L-1011, or Tristar, jumbo jets would eventually be sold. Firm sales now total only about 160, with all but about 30 already delivered. So a number of critics have found prospects of future sales bringing the total to 300 to be unrealistic.

The company said it believed pretax profits on future Tristar deliveries would be enough to recover prior program costs. But it added that, if later assessments showed any such costs to be unrecoverable, the amount would promptly be charged to earnings.

The 1975 earnings report comes at a time when Lockheed is trying to minimize the final damage that will be incurred as the result of disclosures that it paid more than $24 million in bribes and other types of overseas payments to help win aircraft orders.

Through a number of other major corporations, in and out of the United States, Lockheed has been making payments to officials of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation.

New Orders Surge 2.5%; Inventories Rise Slightly

WASHINGTON, March 30—Manufacturers' new orders surged in February, and inventories showed a small increase, the Commerce Department reported today.

At $90.37 billion, new orders were easily the largest on participating companies and were up 2.5 percent from January. Orders in the key sector of durable goods manufacturing increased by $1.81 billion, or 4.2 percent, substantially more than had been estimated in a preliminary report published earlier this month.

Total inventories rose slightly, by $171 million to $147.3 billion. All of this was in non-durable goods, with inventories of durable goods industries essentially unchanged. Manufacturing inventories have risen since their low point of $136.4 billion last September, though inventories in most durable goods industries have shown greater strength.

Manufacturers' total shipments in February rose 1.0 percent to a record $90.95 billion. With shipments again exceeding new orders, the backlog of unfilled orders declined, a pattern that has prevailed for almost a year and a half.

Within new orders for durable goods, orders in the capital goods sector rose 6.8 percent to $12.65 billion, including an increase of $451 million, or 4.4 percent, in nondefense capital goods.

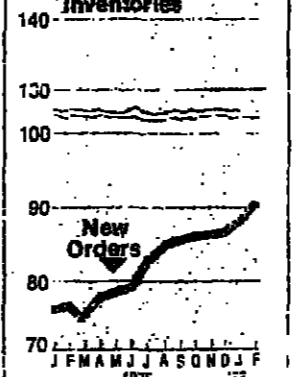

Construction contracts last month totaled $6.14 billion, 22 percent above the level in February 1975, the F. W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Company reported yesterday.

Contracts for residential building rose spectacularly in February to $2.54 billion, 86 percent above the total in the corresponding period of 1975. Nonresidential building, just under $2 billion, however, was down by 6 percent from February 1975.

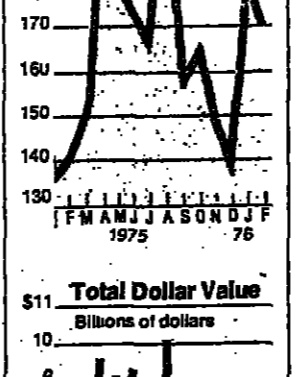

The seasonally adjusted Dodge index of total construction contract value stood at 170.

Senators Approve Bribe Data for Japan

WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today voted to turn over information on alleged bribes paid overseas by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation to the Justice Department for transfer to Japan and other countries.

PAYMENTS STUDIED BY CONTROL DATA

Company's Directors Order a Full Inquiry Into Money Given Officials Abroad

The Control Data Corporation said yesterday that its directors had authorized an investigation to determine the nature and extent of certain payments made by its international subsidiaries to foreign government officials.

The board's authorization of the investigation results from a preliminary study by management in January, which disclosed that questionable payments had been made by computer business subsidiaries and branches in some foreign countries primarily in the years 1973 through 1975.

On the basis of the preliminary study, Control Data said it believed that the total payments, including irregularly accounted-for commission payments, ran approximately $875,000 in 1973, $400,000 in 1974 and $1 million in 1975. Total revenues associated with these payments, the company said, were about $28 million.

In joining the growing list of United States concerns regarding questionable payments to promote exports, Control Data noted the following:

Chief executives of four U.S. companies tell how their plants in Puerto Rico boost profits and productivity

Productivity is well above the U.S. average. And companies keep profits because of 100% tax exemption. Just two reasons why manufacturers are thriving on this nearby U.S. island. If you're looking for a new plant site, and what these corporate chief executives have to say.

These men head up four Fortune 1,000 companies with a total of 108 plants in 38 countries. Here, in their own words, are the reasons why they rate Puerto Rico so highly as a manufacturing site for everything from clinical thermometers to cutting chains.

Omark Industries

Omark Industries, major manufacturer of cutting chain, hydraulic loggers and industrial fasteners, began operations in Puerto Rico in 1965 with a plant in Bayamón.

Last year, this single, 45,000 sq. ft. facility earned over half of the company's total after-tax profits. Omark President Edward S. Smith tells why.

"We've found that in Puerto Rico, the profit you make is the profit you keep. Total tax exemption means exactly that it says—no Federal taxes on personal or corporate income and 100% exemption in all Puerto Rican taxes for up to 30 years.

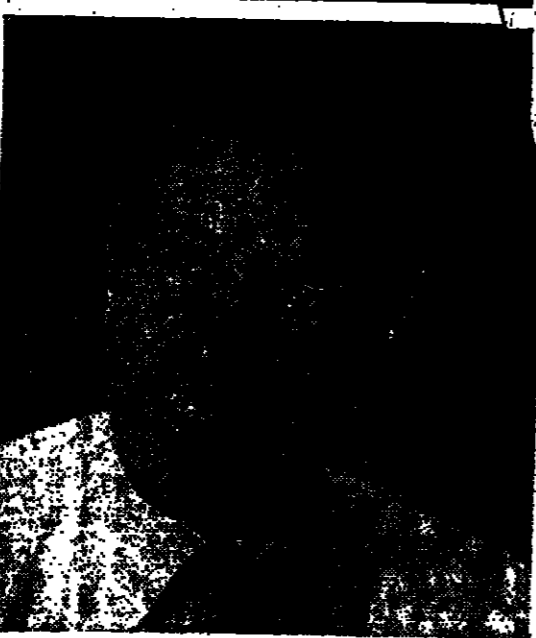

"Out of sixteen Omark plant sites in four countries, our facility in Puerto Rico is the largest contributor to our after-tax profits.

"A vital factor in our success, Mr. Smith comments, "has been the dedication of our Puerto Rican personnel, both lab and management.

"In 1965, we sent 12 workers from Puerto Rico to the company's Portland, Oregon, headquarters to be trained as plant craftsmen. They worked hard and learned fast.

ingness to work hard speaks for itself. Between 1970 and 1974, output from the Bayamón plant almost doubled—and without our hiring any new employees.

"We are investing $2 million," Mr. Smith continues, "to expand our Bayamón facility. And we've recently received a 25-year tax exemption for a new 35,000 sq. ft. plant in the town of Cidra.

"I can't think of a better testimonial than that to show our confidence in Puerto Rico as a profitable manufacturing location."

Baxter Laboratories

Baxter Laboratories' Puerto Rican plants manufacture intricate, sophisticated medical devices, including artificial kidneys.

"The complex design of our products," observes Baxter Chairman William B. Graham, "requires a high level of dexterity and concentration on the production line. We find that our Puerto Rican workers are more than equal to the challenge.

Mr. Graham is of the point of view that talent extends far beyond annual dexterity.

"Today ninety-eight percent of our management is native Puerto Rican. These include all of our plant production managers, the director of engineering and the managers of finance, personnel, materials and computer systems."

Many members of Baxter management team have worked away from the island. Mr. Graham likens the experience to that of Manuel Burgos.

"He wanted as a non-worker in Puerto Rico. After over 10 years of high school, he earned a college degree in business. Manuel Burgos today is the president of our operation which manufactures blood collection systems in the town of Ponce.

Puerto Rico has been a good plant for Baxter, but Baxter has also been a good plant for Puerto Rico.

"We've created 3,100 jobs coming to Puerto Rico in 17 years," remarks Mr. Graham. "By 1960, we had our first plant in Hato Rey and opened operations in Jayuya. We put a plant in Ponce in 1966, in Maricao and Culebra in 1972, and in Aguada just last year.

"That's a total of 100,000 sq. ft. of plant space. And right now we're looking for additional sites."

Technicon Corporation

Six years ago Technicon Corporation of Tarrytown, N.Y. began looking for a new plant site to make its thermometers for blood and other biological fluids.

Technicon President Guy Charlap explains how close cooperation from Commonwealth government agencies was a key factor in the company's decision to locate a plant in Puerto Rico.

"With the help of a team of specialists from Puerto Rico's Economic Development Administration, we chose to build our plant in Humacao. The area offered an abundant and intelligent labor supply, as well as room to grow. We immediately hired workers to staff separate operations for glassblowing, electronics and chemicals."

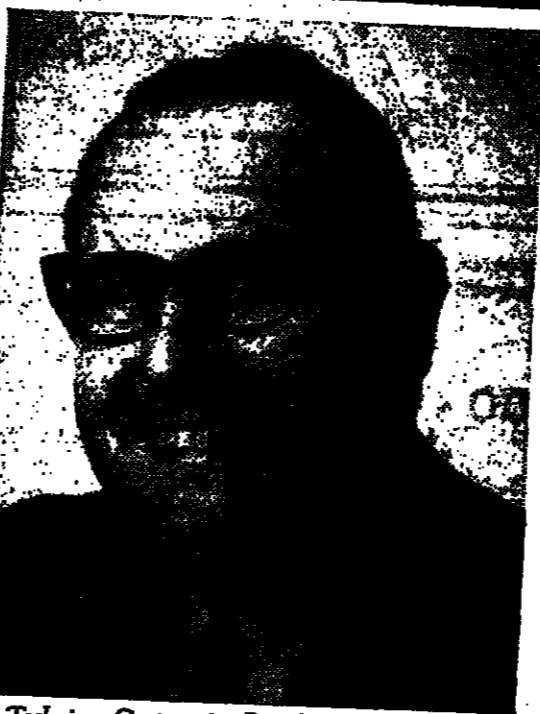

Experts from the Economic Development Administration also helped Technicon launch a 20-week training program.

"The government reimbursed us for the complete cost of workers' time during instruction," recalls Mr. Charlap. "Our original staff of 25 workers has grown to 280 today."

"Because of demand for our analysis systems, Technicon's Puerto Rican operation was under great pressure to start up quickly. The skill, aptitude and eagerness of our new Puerto Rican employees enabled them to start individual piece production immediately.

"They turned out their first completed system in just nine months. Quite a feat considering the complexity of the machines."

"A successful training program, intelligent and willing trainees and lots of hard work produced results that surprised the most optimistic forecasters. Mr. Charlap sums up

Technicon Corporation President Guy Charlap

"Technicon was able to report a profit only six months after start-up. And we've stayed profitable."

"the company's Puerto Rican experience. Technicon was able to report a profit only six months after start-up. And we've stayed profitable."

Becton, Dickinson

Open your medicine chest and chances are you'll find a clinical thermometer or ACE Brand Elastic Bandage produced in one of Becton, Dickinson's Puerto Rican plants.

This maker of quality health care products has grown from one plant in Puerto Rico in 1958 to four plants today. Becton, Dickinson President Wesley J. Howe explains why the company is now studying locations for a fifth plant site.

"What originally impressed us most was the cooperation of the Puerto Rican government, attractive wage rates and 100% tax exemption. Of course, these are still powerful incentives for any manufacturer.

"But more and more we're finding that one of the best reasons for having a plant on the island is the outstanding performance of the Puerto Rican workers."

"Making mercury glass thermometers is a very complex business," observes Mr. Howe. "Over the years our Puerto Rican employees have adapted exceptionally well to the technical challenges of the automated production procedures we have introduced."

"In addition their many sound suggestions have led to improved quality and productivity."

Becton, Dickinson President Wesley J. Howe

"Output has gone up steadily and over the past seven years production per employee increased at a rate of 11% a year."

ity. As a result we have made substantial investments in new equipment over the years."

Worker productivity impressed Becton, Dickinson from the start. "We were amazed and delighted when our production goals were achieved in the very first week of operations," Mr. Howe continues. "Output has gone up steadily and over the past seven years production per employee increased at a rate of 11% a year. Output per worker this year is almost twice what it was seven years ago."

New Fortune 1,000 entries

Just within the past year, five other companies on the prestigious Fortune 1,000 list made their manufacturing debut in Puerto Rico—Avon Products, Clorox, Richardson-Merrell, Johnson & Johnson and Eaton Laboratories, division of Morton-Norwich Products.

In addition, four veterans of the manufacturing scene in Puerto Rico expanded their operations—General Electric, Digital Equipment, Bell & Howell and Union Carbide.

The Consolidated Rail Corporation which is succeeding to most of the transportation assets of the Penn Central, lost a court bid last week to enjoin Canada Southern from paying the dividend, which will come out of the latter road's retained earnings.

American Finance System, a big percentage loser, dropped 2 1/2% to 3 1/2%. The company said it was not seeking court protection at this time under the Federal Bankruptcy Act, thanks to a proposed agreement with its creditors.

The Justice Department last week refused to approve the proposed merger of American Finance into Beneficial Corporation. Yesterday, Beneficial added 1/4 to 2 1/2%.

Kresge Down by 1 1/2%... S. S. Kresge fell 1 1/2% to 36 1/2% in active trading, reflecting the announcement of a proposed offering of 3 million common shares of the retail chain.

Xerox dropped 2 1/2% to 56 1/2% as one of the session's most heavily traded issues. The stock apparently was impacted by the potential competition of new copier products to be introduced by Eastman Kodak, which rose 3/4 to 115 1/4.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange ran 17.93 million shares, marking the third lowest daily turnover of 1976. Monday saw the second slowest trading day with 16.1 million shares changing hands. Nationwide trading in all issues listed on the Big Board increased to 20.81 million shares from 18.69 million shares in 10-share lots.

The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, adding 3/8 to 15 1/2%, continued its string of recent gains. Favorable comments in the current issue of Forbes magazine have helped the stock.

Corning Glass Works, climbing more than 2 points, extended its advance of Monday, in response to sharply improved quarterly profits.

Chemtron, meanwhile, fell a fraction after dropping 5 1/2 points on Monday. Management has said that first-quarter profits will be well below year-earlier results.

Heck's rose 3/4 to 16 1/2% after officials said that directors shortly will consider splitting the stock and possibly raising the cash dividend.

Otis Elevator climbed 3/4 to 42 1/2%. United Technologies, which acquired an estimated 70 percent of the stock of Otis through a tender offer late last year, has proposed a merger under which the elevator concern would become a wholly owned subsidiary of United.

Chromalloy American fell 3/4 to 13 after directors approved plans for a public offering of 2 million common shares. In recent sessions, announcements of proposed equity financings typically have caused short-term declines in the stock prices of affected companies, because it means an increase in outstanding stock and a potential dilution of earnings per share.

Prices of bonds show sharp drop... and most Government notes and bonds fell. In the money market, the interest rate on Federal funds edged up to 4 1/2 percent, and the Federal Reserve injected more money into the banking system to nudge the rate back down.

This slight increase in the Federal funds rate, the key short-term rate in the money market, made the credit markets nervous yesterday afternoon. Later, some large institutional investors put out lists of corporate bonds for sale, and that, too, tended to push prices down.

Traders were inclined to describe the bond market's drop as "technical"—merely a natural downturn after an extended advance that began in early March.

In the big California bond sale, the margin that separated the three bids submitted was razor thin. A group of investors, men firms one bank managed by the Chase Manhattan Bank, won the issue by making a bid that resulted in an interest cost to the state of 5.381 percent. A Salomon Brothers group came in second at 5.383 percent and a Bank of America syndicate, third at 5.389 percent.

Close bidding frequently helps sell bonds to investors, for they reason that the financial community has an undivided view of what the bonds are worth.

Bond Ratings Listed... The California bonds were priced to yield from 3.40 percent on those maturing in 1976, up to 5.70 percent on those coming due in 2002.

Moody's rates 16 states Aaa, and Standard & Poor's rates 15 Aaa, but the California bond sale yesterday was the first Aaa/Aaa bond issue to be sold, since Georgia sold $27.41 million on March 9. The contrast in yields was sharp: California bonds due in 1978, for example, yielded 3.40 percent, or 20 basis points below Georgia bonds yielding 3.60 percent. California bonds due in 1991 yield 5.20, while Georgia bonds due that year yielded 5.60 percent.

Business Briefs

House Panel Backs City Bond Aid... WASHINGTON, March 30 (Reuters)—The House Ways and Means Committee approved today a 35 percent Federal subsidy for interest payments by municipalities that choose to issue bonds subject to Federal taxation. The bill, which now goes to the House of Representatives, would have the Federal Government pay 35 percent of the city interest costs for taxable municipal bonds issued after June 30, 1977.

The Government would pay $35 out of every $100 in interest by city governments from bonds subject to Federal taxes. City bonds are not now subject to Federal taxes and the measure would give cities and states an option of either issuing taxable bonds or continuing issuing tax-free securities.

U.S. Will Study Paper Industry Prices... A spokesman for the Government's Council on Wage and Price Stability said yesterday that it was undertaking a study of prices in the paper industry. The agency noted that paper industry sales accounted for about 2 percent of the gross national product and that from November 1975 through February 1976, wholesale prices of pulp, paper and allied products have increased at a 10.9 percent annual rate... more than four times faster than the rate of increase for all commodities—2.7 percent.

The council has no authority to reduce or bar price increases but exerts pressure on such moves through its studies. Edwin A. Locke Jr., president of the American Paper Institute, said that the association did not keep figures on prices but added that he felt the council was basing its estimates on the linerboard segment of the industry, which raised prices in November and then in February.

Ford Signs Commuter Railroad Bill... WASHINGTON, March 30 (AP)—President Ford today signed a $2.14 billion bill aimed at improving commuter rail service between New York, Washington and Boston. Of the amount, $2.02 billion is to be used by the United States Railway Association for the purchase of debentures and stock in the Consolidated Rail Corporation, the quasi-government railroad formed from seven Northeastern railroads. The rest of the money is for railroad activities of the Department of Transportation and administrative expenses of Conrail. The appropriation is for the 1978 through 1979 fiscal years.

Dollar and Gold Decline in Europe... BRUSSELS, March 30 (UPI)—The dollar declined on most European money markets today. The price of gold lost $1.50 in Zurich, closing at $128.37 an ounce, the lowest closing price in two months. In London, it dropped 50 cents to $129.

In London, the pound closed at $1.91625, against $1.9175 Monday. In Zurich and Frankfurt the pound also dropped, going down from 4.8873 to 4.8860 Swiss francs and from 4.8870 to 4.8855 marks, respectively.

Contract Award... The Northrop Corporation announced yesterday that the Swiss Government had signed contracts with the Department of Defense and the company for 72 Northrop F-5E and F-5F tactical fighter aircraft. The Swiss Parliament approved the purchase and voted $450 million to cover the program which includes spare parts and support and ground equipment.

S.E.C. DROPS PLANS FOR FORECAST RULE

WASHINGTON, March 30—The Securities and Exchange Commission has given up plans to require companies making profit forecasts to meet detailed reporting standards, according to senior staff officials. The decision was not surprising since the proposal ran into overwhelming opposition from businessmen, lawyers, accountants and security analysts when it was outlined last year.

"We're pulling back," declared Mary E. T. Beach, associate director of the commission's division of corporate finance. "A lot of people panicked because it looked so complicated."

The S.E.C. had hoped that investors would gain additional relevant information by forcing companies to detail the circumstances in which projections were made, the assumptions behind them and the reasons for any changes. It had also hoped to cut out the indirect disclosure of corporate developments that occur when companies respond to questions about whether an earnings estimate is "in the ballpark."

But hundreds of comments that poured in to the commission's division indicated that a large majority of companies would probably stop making any forecasts at all if it meant they would be subject to the proposed rules.

PAYMENTS STUDIED BY CONTROL DATA

Continued From Page 61... and practices. The company continued. "It appears that several members of senior management, including one who has been a director of the company for three years, had some degree of prior knowledge of, or generally authorized, one or more of the foreign payments."

Control Data noted that "there is no suggestion" that any of its employees profited personally from the payments. Based on preliminary information, the company said it does not appear that any material additional payments of United States income tax will be required.

Additional Payments... American Standard Inc. said yesterday that its subsidiaries had paid hundreds of thousands of dollars to foreign government officials, employees or intermediaries between 1972 and 1975. The subsidiaries and countries involved were not identified.

In one country, the company said, payments in the form of "excessive commissions" were made to salesmen of an American Standard subsidiary.

But hundreds of comments that poured in to the commission's division indicated that a large majority of companies would probably stop making any forecasts at all if it meant they would be subject to the proposed rules.

1975 ANNUAL REPORT

Tenneco posts record results in a challenging year... SUMMARY OPERATING REVENUES: Manufacturing—$1,229,082 (1975) vs $1,076,061 (1974)

NET INCOME $342,936 vs $314,149; PREFERRED AND PREFERENCE STOCK DIVIDENDS $29,387 vs $35,549; NET INCOME TO COMMON STOCK $313,549 vs $278,600

EARNINGS PER SHARE OF COMMON STOCK: Average shares outstanding $4.15 vs $3.98; Fully diluted $3.63 vs $3.35; Average number of shares outstanding 75,608,800 vs 70,079,891

1975 was a year which dramatically demonstrated the advantages of Tenneco's planned program of multi-industry, multi-market diversification in basic businesses.

Despite inflationary pressures and a sluggish economy, the company achieved operating revenues of $5.6 billion and net income of $342.9 million—the best year ever for Tenneco.

Earnings per common share were $3.63 versus $3.35 a year earlier on a fully diluted basis, and $4.15 as compared to $3.98 on a primary basis. At the same time, Tenneco's common stock dividend was again increased, and is now at the annual rate of $1.76 per share.

The mix of earnings among the company's major businesses was somewhat different from previous years, said Wilton E. Scott, chairman, president and chief executive officer. Some Tenneco companies were able to maintain the momentum of the past. Others were confronted with problems of supply, higher operational costs or reduced consumer demand. All, however, remained strong and positioned themselves for further growth, and their combined results set new financial records.

Growth and strength through diversification has been a long-term Tenneco goal. The results of 1975 provide evidence that this goal is being achieved. For more facts and figures about Tenneco's performance in 1975, write: Tenneco Annual Report, Section P, P. O. Box 2511, Houston, Texas 77001.

Ill Winds Spur Sales Promotion

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

"Since the beginning of the recession our business has increased very very extensively."

That's what the man said. Now guess, what's his line? It's sales promotion, more specifically sweepstakes promotions and the man is Thomas J. Conlon, president of the D. L. Blair Corporation, which, he says, is the biggest sweepstakes creator and runner in the country.

Having made his very positive comments about his recession successes he went on to explain, "It forced a lot of marketers who never thought of consumer sales promotion to look at it more carefully."

Then, going on to explain his company's spot in the marketing mix, he said, "If the consumer is predisposed to your product then we are the little flipper that moves the consumer from predisposition to purchase."

And recession isn't the only ill wind that is blowing Mr. Conlon some good. Even the soaring postal rates that are crippling some big mail users, though initially feared by the Blair organization, have really helped.

"We feared a loss," Mr. Conlon said, "but the increases seemed to have helped our business by forcing efficiencies and more effective promotions."

The 40-year-old executive, who was once a staff editorial artist at the Daily News and most recently associate director of merchandising and sales at Benton & Bowles, was interviewed in his office in a modern, but small, building in Great Neck, L.I., just across the street from Cuttermill Park.

The company deserted the city about a year ago, moving its staff out of 460 Park Avenue at 57th Street. This has caused no hardships for the employees, according to Mr. Conlon, who lives in Massapequa Park, L.I.

"From a business standpoint," he said "it's much better, the employees like it better and we can spend more time on client business and less time with the built-in harassments of city life."

Besides, he said, clients have been moving out, too, so there is more occasion to go to the airport to fly to one than to go into the city.

Blair has only about 20 people in Great Neck. About 15 of them are professionals, the account people who must maintain client contact.

The big payroll, some 105, is working in the fulfillment operation in Blair, N.H., to which it moved about six years ago from lower Manhattan.

Keith Fischer Joining Avrett, Free as a Chief

Keith P. Fischer

Keith P. Fischer, who has been an executive vice president of Warren, Muller, Dolobowsky, is today joining Jack Avrett and Marcela Free, at PBL, which is becoming Avrett, Free & Fischer.

Mr. Fischer, 43 years old, is president and chief executive officer, while Mr. Avrett will be chairman and Miss Free, co-chairman.

Founded in 1971 as the Project Group and intended to be a new kind of creative advertising service, the company has evolved into a full-service agency. It has been operating as one for the last two years, as a matter of fact, according to Mr. Avrett and is billing $18 million.

Mr. Fischer, who began his business career at Lever Brothers, was at Grey Advertising for 14 years, resigning in 1972 as an executive vice president. He had the same title at the Corporation for Public Broadcasting in Washington where he worked for a year and a half.

has one post office for the community and another for D. L. Blair, which is the largest mailer in Nebraska.

At any one time, according to Mr. Conlon, there are never less than 25 to 30 D. L. Blair operated promotions in progress and they might involve a sweepstakes, premiums, cash refunds or sampling.

And although machines have been designed to do the job, all of the counting of proofs of purchase (box-tops) is done by hand.

"We do it by choice for total integrity," said Mr. Conlon, who was later to observe that D. L. Blair insists on total control because "our single-most important selling point is our unquestioned integrity, we have to protect it."

D. L. Blair, which Advertising Age ranks second in size to the Glendinning Company, is made up of three divisions, Blair Marketing Associates, Blair Promotion Services and the Promotion Audit Corporation.

Mr. Conlon said that he and Glendinning get new account people pretty much the same way. They train them themselves or hire a person who has worked for Procter & Gamble either at the company or one of its agencies.

Another accolade for the super sooper.

$6 Sweepstakes Guide

By strange coincidence yesterday's mail contained a copy of "The Sweepstakes Planning Guide," a 73-page booklet by Robert D. Blashek, formerly D. L. Blair, and now president of the Independent Judging Organization, a division of I.M. Tower & Company. The company, at 575 Lexington Avenue, is charging $6 a copy—and no box-tops.

Senator Assails Postal Cuts

The White House was accused of "playing postal brinkmanship" yesterday by Senator Gale W. McGee, chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, who drew a parallel with Washington's attitude toward New York, and its financial plight.

The Wyoming Democrat was the luncheon speaker at Direct Marketing Day '76, which attracted some 2,200 interested parties to the New York Hilton Hotel.

Generally considered a friend of the Postal Service, the Senator attacked it last week because of its suggested cutbacks in service.

PACIFIC BOARD GETS OPTIONS CLEARANCE

The Securities and Exchange Commission has given the Pacific Stock Exchange permission to begin call options trading. Lee Pickard, the agency's director of market regulations, said yesterday at an options-trading seminar held by the American Stock Exchange.

The Pacific exchange had planned to start trading in call options on Friday on a newly built trading floor in San Francisco beginning with 10 issues and adding 10 more soon.

Mr. Pickard said later at a news conference that put trading would not come by June as the Chicago Board Options Exchange has requested. The S.E.C. official said that put trading would come later.

He added that he was not in a position to say exactly when. Meanwhile, he added, the S.E.C. wanted to make a further study of the effects of options trading on primary markets.

Call options are the right to buy and put options are the right to sell stock at a given price within a given time. The Chicago exchange introduced call options three years ago and has been pressing the S.E.C. for permission to start put trading in June.

Penney's Dividend Raised

To 32c From 29c a Share

Directors of the J. C. Penney Company Inc. yesterday increased the quarterly dividend to 32 cents a share from 29 cents, lifting the annual rate on the common stock to $1.28 a share. Payable May 1 to holders of record April 10, it is the first increase in two years.

Another leading retail chain, the S. S. Kresge Company, will vote for an increase in the quarterly dividend to 8 cents from 6 cents a share. Robert E. Dewar, chairman, said yesterday that the finance committee intended to make that recommendation to the board at its April 10 meeting.

He also announced that a registration statement was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission covering the proposed sale of $10 million of common shares. They will be sold by the Kresge Foundation which owns 8,811,700 Kresge shares.

Folger's Coffee Prices Up on Ground, Instant

The Folger's Coffee Company, the nation's second largest coffee wholesaler, after General Foods' Maxwell House, yesterday raised the price of its ground coffee by 15 cents a pound and by 2 cents an ounce on its instant brand.

Folger, which is a division of Procter & Gamble, said the move reflected "continuing increases in imported green coffee prices." The company added that the increases amounted to a 9.3 percent rise on its ground coffee and 6.6 percent on its instant brand.

Coffee prices have been increasing since last July when frost damaged Brazil's 1976 coffee crop. This was followed by rains and floods in Colombia, the second largest coffee producer. Another reason that reportedly triggered 20 percent of that nation's crop imports have also reportedly declined from Angola because of the war there.

WHITE MOTOR PROXY LISTS DIFFICULTIES

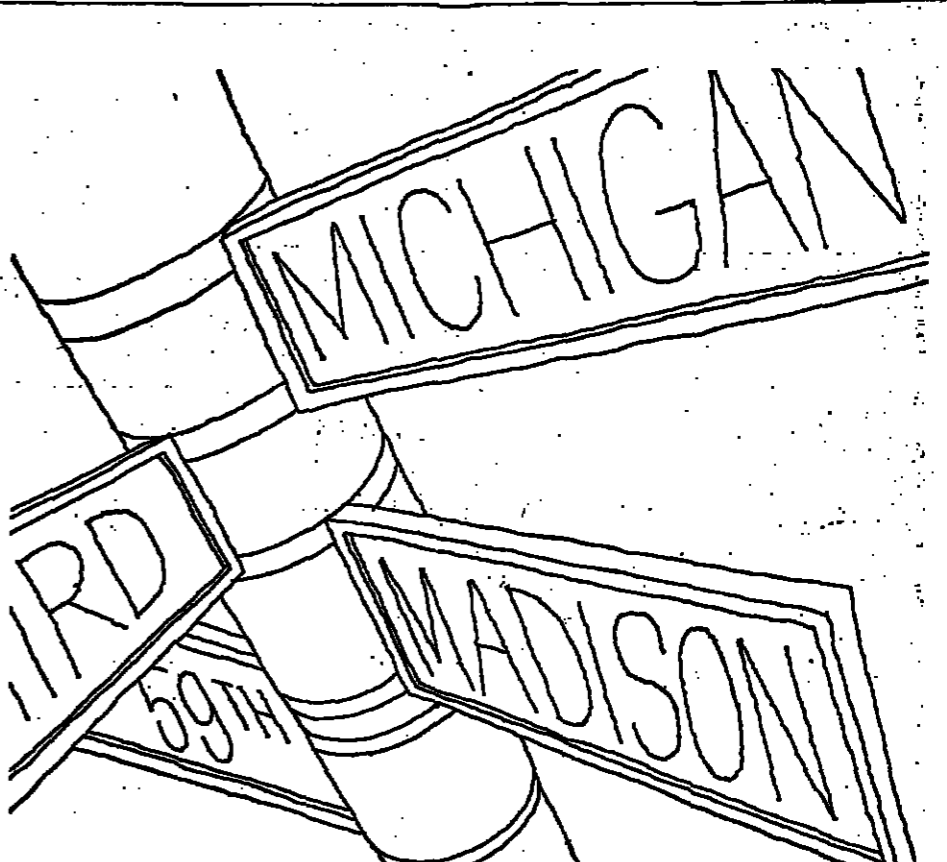

Preparing for its planned acquisition by White Consolidated Industries Inc., the White Motor Corporation told shareholders yesterday that financial difficulties had led to buyer resistance and deterioration of its dealer network.

The company has been forced to cut truck and farm equipment production, White Motor said, despite strong demand, while its financing subsidiary has been unable to provide the company with adequate financing, thus affecting sales.

Past due accounts stood at about $52 million by mid-March, White Motor added, increasing the company's difficulty in obtaining materials on time. White Motor said it had sent proxy material sent to shareholders that it had experienced difficulty in arranging stand-by letters of credit and other documents needed to sell to the Government and others.

White Motor said it would hold a special meeting of shareholders in Cleveland May 4 to vote on its acquisition by White Consolidated in a $78.7 million exchange of securities.

SYNERGISM? YES!
... With contemporary emphasis on efficient use of materials, energy and all resources including investment and operating capital, the resulting cost savings for insurance office space in San Francisco calls for the rehabilitation of prime older structures which can offer rents 40% below new space and with equivalent standards and amenities.
This opportunity in a present market and with established cost provides for the investor, purchaser, or joint venture the potential of 300%+ capital gains and 12%+ cash returns on an investment of $1,000,000 creating a value of $7.5 million with a debt structure of 25% return.

Nadjari's Motives Questioned in Court

By TOM GOLDSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 30 — The lawyer for Patrick J. Cunningham, Democratic state chairman, told the State Court of Appeals today that Maurice E. Nadjari, special state prosecutor, only wanted to embarrass Mr. Cunningham, who is the Bronx county chairman, and not really did intend to question him before a special grand jury.

Mr. Nadjari's representative denied that this was so and speculated that the issue should not even be heard by the court, the state's highest, and Charles D. Bretel, the court's chief judge, wondered aloud several times whether the court was being asked to look at "something that is historical" that would have to be argued again in a different form in the next few months.

These arguments and observations were made in the latest legal skirmish in the running legal battle between Mr. Nadjari and Mr. Cunningham. For the last three months, Mr. Nadjari has sought to question Mr. Cunningham and three other Bronx Democrats about the possible fixing of cases and settling of judgeships in the Bronx.

Last month, Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court, who presides over Mr. Nadjari's grand jury, ordered the four Democrats to appear before a special grand jury. That decision was upheld unanimously earlier this month by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court for the First Department.

An expedited appeal was taken to the Court of Appeals, which heard arguments today that were alternately highly emotional and highly technical. The 90-minute session stretched into early evening.

In an issue that has not been fully explored at the lower appellate court, Bennett L. Gershan, chief of Mr. Nadjari's appeals bureau, argued that the original order of Justice Sandler could not be appealed.

The Court of Appeals has never squarely decided whether orders denying motions to vacate grand jury subpoenas can be appealed, and Mr. Gershan urged the court "to come to grips with this issue today."

He said that 20 motions had already been made in the Bronx inquiry. "It looks like this case will be endless if the appellate proliferation can continue," he said. "How in the world can a grand jury investigation be conducted in this type of situation? It's a waste of time, waste of money and not authorized by law."

Judge Bretel, who frequently interrupted Mr. Gershan and the other lawyers, also questioned whether the case should be before the court—but he approached that question from a different perspective.

The contested subpoenas were issued under the original executive order that created Mr. Nadjari's office in 1972. That order was amended in January to clarify the special prosecutor's jurisdiction in the Bronx. Before today's hearing,

New Diocese on Coast Formed by Pope Paul

ROME, March 30 (AP)—Pope Paul VI has established a new diocese centered in the city of Orange, Calif., and appointed Bishop William R. Johnson, 57 years old, to head it, the Vatican announced today.

The diocese of Orange was formed from territory belonging to the Archdiocese of Los Angeles. Bishop Johnson, a native of Tonopah, Nev., had been auxiliary bishop in charge of the Orange area under Timothy Cardinal Manning of Los Angeles since 1973.

Pope Paul has set up dozens of new dioceses in recent years in rapidly expanding urban areas around the world.

Cable TV to The Folies Bergere From Las Vegas

Home Box Office, the pay-television service operating on cable systems around the country, has arranged for the presentation of the Folies Bergere in Las Vegas as a 90-minute special for its subscribers. The program will be taped during a performance at the Tropicaan Hotel, where the United States edition of the Paris Folies Bergere has been running for 15 years.

The lavish revue, which has never been presented on commercial television because of the partial nudity that is an essential characteristic of it, is to be shown without editing or censorship on the pay-television service. The program will be presented three times, on April 23, 24 and 27.

The acquisition of the Folies Bergere is part of the effort by Home Box Office to expand its programming beyond movies and sports events with entertainment not available on commercial television. Recently the company began production of a series of comedies, which will present them during actual performances in nightclubs.

Home Box Office now has more than 300,000 subscribers on affiliated cable systems in 23 states, including the two cable systems in Manhattan.

Jersey Leader for Carter special to the New York Times

TRENTON, March 30 — State Senator Anne C. Martindell, of Mercer County, who served as chairman of the state delegation to the 1974 Democratic National Convention, today announced that she would run as a delegate pledged to Jimmy Carter at the April 10 Democratic district miniconvention in New Jersey.

FACT OR FICTION?

Truth may be the first victim when television 'docudramas' rewrite history

By Bill Davidson

I have long since reformed, but I began my career in journalism as a writer of lies for a sportscaster named Bill Stern, who, in renown at least, was the Howard Cosell of his day. Every week, another writer and I—on Stern's direction—would unabashedly make up so-called "true sports stories," mostly about historical characters who were dead and could not protest. One of my classics was about Abraham Lincoln, who, having been assassinated at Ford's Theater in Washington, regained consciousness just long enough to say to Secretary of War Stanton, "Tell General Abner Doubleday not to let baseball die." After that whopper, NBC ordered Stern to label his dramatizations "sports legends," but his weekly radio show continued to prosper.

Now, with the age of "docudrama," "actuality drama," or whatever it may be called, the broadcasting industry seems to have come full cycle. There it was again, the word "legend," as in "The Legend of Valentino" on ABC-TV last fall. Rudolph Valentino was introduced as a starving house-burglar (actually he began as a fairly successful hustler and movie bit player); his benefactress, June Mathis, was portrayed as a beautiful minor writer who went back to obscurity in Brooklyn to suffer her unrequited love for Valentino (actually she was fat and ugly, one of the most powerful screenwriters in the history of the movies, and much more influential than Valentino); e.g., etc., etc.

But ABC at least had the good grace and honesty to label its Valentino picture "a romantic fiction." The problem is that too many other blockbuster network docudramas also are tainted with romantic fiction, but, just as with Bill Stern's tall tales, they are presented to the public as essentially true stories.

Last November, for example, NBC gave us "Eric," about a real-life young man who died after a courageous struggle against leukemia. The two-hour film began with the flat-out statement that "this is a true story," yet the boy's name was changed, the locale of his battle for life was transposed from Connecticut and New York to the State of Washington, chronology was altered, the unpleasant but most inspiring facts of Eric's ordeal were excised, his athletic prowess as a soccer player was blatantly exaggerated in a scene just before his death, and—most inexcusable of all—there was a tender love story between Eric and a nurse named Mary Lou, which according to the boy's mother, Doris Lund, didn't happen as it was portrayed. Earlier came "I Will Fight No More Forever" on ABC, which at first viewing seemed to be a noble, historically accurate look at the persecution of Chief Joseph and the Nez Perce Indians by the U.S. Army in the late 1870s. The show's sponsor, the Xerox Corporation, even sent out printed classroom guides for use by school children throughout the country. But then the historians were heard from. They complained that not only were there incorrect juxtapositions of time and place in the docudrama, but that even attitudes and recorded events had been distorted. For one thing, Chief Joseph's pursuer, Gen. Oliver O. Howard, was shown as a liberal in his thinking toward Indians; but actually, at the time of the events depicted, he was one of the Army's hardliners, dedicated to the use of all means to defeat the Nez Perce. Another typical historian's complaint: the show opened with the murder of an Indian by a white settler, who later was killed in an act of vengeance by the Indian's son. Historically, a Nez Perce Indian was murdered, but his son's revenge was exacted not on the actual malefactor but on 19 other innocent settlers in the area.

How about "Babe" on CBS, the "true story" of the great woman athlete Babe Didrikson and her valiant losing fight against cancer with the help of her wrestler-husband, George Zaharias? As CBS vice president Steve Mills told me, "We frankly set out to make this a warm, idyllic, unusual love story, from the facts as supplied by Zaharias himself. I guess he can't be blamed for remembering only the good things of the marriage." Unfortunately, too many sportswriters were witness to the frequent storminess of the Didrikson-Zaharias relationship and they complained, in effect, that Hollywood had made a sugarcoted Disneyized version of what essentially was an All in the Family conflict, with tragic overtones.

Similar accusations of truth-bending have been leveled against nearly all of this season's docudramas, among them "The Silence," "Fear on Trial," "Foster and Laurie," "The Deadly Tower," "Collision Course" and "Guilty or Innocent: The Sam Sheppard Murder Case." Swipes have been taken in advance at "Helter Skelter" (the dramatization of Vincent Bugliosi's book about the Charles Manson murders) and "Return to Earth" (the story of astronaut Buzz Aldrin's emotional breakdown after walking on the moon) and "Farewell to Manzanar" (a personal reminiscence of our controversial concentration camps for Japanese-American citizens during World War II).

Does this mean that the docudrama is more drama than docu? Probably yes.

Are facts sometimes distorted to make a better story? Probably yes.

Is the American public deliberately being misled by representations that these films are in fact true stories? Probably yes.

My answers to all three questions are qualified because there are some extenuating circumstances in what is an ages-old conflict between hard fact and dramatic license in all forms of theater, dating back to William Shakespeare and beyond. There are no better illustrations of this problem than the two most challenged docudramas of the season: "Fear on Trial" and "Guilty or Innocent: The Sam Sheppard Murder Case," which, incidentally, has the highest Nielsen rating of any TV-movie so far this season.

"Fear on Trial," you will recall, was CBS's mea culpa about how it contributed to the anti-communist blacklisting of radio-TV personality John Henry Faulk in 1956, and his long court fight for vindication. The show, though generally praised, has been accused of selective condensation to the point where important CBS witnesses against Faulk (and on the side of the blacklisters) were eliminated. Also, there has been considerable criticism of the not-quite-accurate handling, in the docudrama, of Faulk's estranged wife, who drops out of sight midway through the script, whereas she was, in fact, in the courtroom for at least part of the trial.

David Rintels is the writer of "Fear on Trial." He also is the respected president of the Writers Guild West. Rintels told me, "It's been a bitter, galling experience for me to be accused of falsifying facts. I had to tell a story condensing six or seven years into a little less than two hours, which means I could just barely hit the major highlights. I did what I think all writers should do—present the essence of the facts and capture the truth of the general story. As it was, CBS didn't come out looking too good, even though I couldn't include all the details. Attorney Louis Nizer's summation to the jury took more than 12 hours. I had to do it in three minutes.

"As for Faulk's wife, the divorce was so messy that I made the judgment call that it would be better to eliminate her from the latter stages of the story, rather than dredge up painful problems for a lot of people. I stuck to the record, except in intimate scenes for which there was no record—and that's what writers are paid to do. I'll go to my grave believing I dealt honestly with the overall facts."

The defenders of NBC's Sam Sheppard docudrama also claimed the right to winnow out the truth as they saw it, in the interests of necessarily compressed storytelling. The main beef against the film was that it overexaggerated newsmen's outrageous behavior in the courtroom during the trial, whereas the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark Sheppard decision had also cited "massive pretrial publicity" as an important factor bearing on the inability of the defendant to get a fair trial.

To Louis Rudolph (who wrote the story and developed the project), it made more sense dramatically to play up visible courtroom disturbances by the press rather than concentrating on the difficult-to-photograph pretrial transgressions by late columnist Bob Considine and others. "It all amounts to the same thing," he told me, "and every word we used in the disturbance sequences came out of the transcript of the trial." He admitted some exaggeration for dramatic effect, and executive producer Harvey Bennett added, "We did select only certain scenes from the transcript for emphasis—but they were all true."

The truth. There indeed are varying versions of it, as writer Ernest Kinoy found when he wrote the script of ABC's "Collision Course" in which Henry Fonda plays Douglas MacArthur and E.G. Marshall is a credible Harry Truman. Kinoy says he faithfully followed both the MacArthur and Truman memoirs in depicting the events before and after the fateful meeting of the General and the President on Wake Island at the height of the Korean War. "But then," said Kinoy before the program was telecast, "I was faced with the meeting itself, which took place inside a Quonset hut on the island with absolutely no one else present, not even a military secretary. I made up that intrinsic key scene, based on what I knew had happened afterwards when Truman fired MacArthur. The Truman partisans have one idea of the truth of that meeting in the Quonset hut and the MacArthur admirers have their version—so undoubtedly I'll be slammed by both." He was, and apparently with good reason, because the version of the meeting that Truman developed later strayed a good distance from the facts.

John Henry Faulk loved "Fear on Trial." After all, it was his version of what had happened. Astronaut Edwin (Buzz) Aldrin isn't quite so sure about ABC's interpretation of his inability to cope with life after leaving the space program, even though the film, "Return to Earth," is a dramatization of his own book and he served as consultant to the TV-project. (The movie has not yet been shown on TV.) Aldrin said, "On the whole, I'm satisfied with the picture, but condensation sometimes alters the truth. For example, you're left at the end thinking I'm still a mixed-up guy emotionally, when by now I'm actually recovered and coping quite well. Also, there's a romantic scene at the end in which I'm walking down a beach hand in hand with my ex-wife. It never bened that way. In fact, I'd already told her I was a divorce and was going to marry someone else

Brandon Stoddard, vice president in charge of movies at ABC, has his own version of the fact the Aldrin docudrama. He told me, "In normal structure, we'd show a man slowly falling a destroying his family, but fighting back and reacting. But we didn't do it that way because it could happen that way at that time. Aldrin then was suffering deep depression and I felt we had to do a depressive as he actually is. It doesn't help the but it is accurate."

Of all the docudrama experts I spoke with, Stoddard made the most sense. He frankly admitted his network does "actuality" movies because they're easier to sell to a potential audience of pre-broadcast promotion "if there are actual events that are familiar to people to begin with." He said, "We should not be held to the absolute truth of pure documentaries, because we're in business of making movies, and audiences want movies to be moved, to get involved with characters who live and breathe and whom you can relate to. I'm not a reporter. If it's pure documentary you're looking for, the news department does it better. Docudramas get much higher ratings. I cons-them to be historical fiction as opposed to historical and historical fiction always far outsells historical bookstores."

Stoddard added, "On the other hand, we are aware of the terrible danger and responsibility involved in doing our kind of historical fiction. By us dramatic license, we can take a point of view that could affect the attitudes of millions of people. For example, we have '21 Hours at Munich' in development. It's about the massacre of the Israeli athlete by Arab terrorists at the 1972 Olympics. Since we have to tell at least part of the story from the point of view of one of the Arabs, we can't create sympathy for him. We must get the message across that acts of terrorism, no one wins in the end. I'm not sure it will work, and if it doesn't, we'll yank it as a docudrama."

The problem is that, given the success of docudramas, no one in the industry is ready yet to openly label their product "historical fiction"—except possibly in the rare case of a "Legend of Valentino," in which the truth was so distorted that to otherwise would have been ridiculous. Thus, CBS' "Helter Skelter" (an upcoming film about the Charles Manson murders) begins with actor George DiCenzo saying, "You are about to see a dramatization of actual facts in which certain names have been changed. But the story is true. The story is all true. At the very least, because of pending lawsuits, certain fictional adjustments had to be made."

What with possible docudramas coming up, Sen. Joseph McCarthy, the Attica Prison riots and Martin Luther King Jr. television experts in the academic community are justifiably disturbed. C. such expert is psychologist Dr. Victor B. Cline of the University of Utah, who pioneered in studies of the effect of TV violence on children. Dr. Cline told me, "The very real danger of these docudrama films that people take it for granted that they're true and—unlike similar fictionalized history in movies and the theater—they are seen on a medium which also presents straight news. No matter how many they call these movies 'drama,' they're really a vacancy journalism. They can't help reflecting the point of view of the writer or the studio or the network. I think they should carry a disclaimer to the effect that the story is not totally true but based on some of the elements of what actually occurred."

But, as we learned from Orson Welles' panicky the country with his radio version of "War of the Worlds" in 1938 (and recently done in semidocumentary form on ABC-TV), even that won't prevent people from believing what they see on television.

Lesley Warren and Franco Nero in "The Legend of Valentino."

er was blatantly exaggerated in a scene just before his death, and—most inexcusable of all—there was a tender love story between Eric and a nurse named Mary Lou, which according to the boy's mother, Doris Lund, didn't happen as it was portrayed. Earlier came "I Will Fight No More Forever" on ABC, which at first viewing seemed to be a noble, historically accurate look at the persecution of Chief Joseph and the Nez Perce Indians by the U.S. Army in the late 1870s. The show's sponsor, the Xerox Corporation, even sent out printed classroom
